PREFACE.

The present work consists of two portions—the Index proper and the Concordance. The Index deals mainly with the proper names occurring in the Mahābhārata. The student should therefore first look for information under such headings as are names, and not under narrative headings such as Indravijaya and the like.

The paragraph references found under the names in the Index are given sometimes alone [e.g. § 547], and sometimes with the addition of small italic letters [e.g. § 201b]. If there is no such addition, the paragraphs (viz. abstracts or paraphrases of the text) are themselves sections of the narrative, and given under the name in question, because the bearer of the name is the principal actor. Such paragraph references, without small italic letters, are often followed by a parenthesis. Thus, under the heading Agni, we find the quotation "§§ 254-260 (Khāndavadah.)." Here the references are suggestive of a narrative which will be found in full under the heading given within parenthesis, viz. Khāndavadahanaparvan, and the name in question, in this case Agni, is the name of one among several principal actors, so that it would seem arbitrary to refer the narrative to him alone.

A small italic letter after a paragraph reference and followed by a word within parenthesis is used when the name to which it is added does not connote the principal actor or the chief item of the narrative, but is only incidentally mentioned, though the reference is of interest for, and solely, or at least chiefly, concerned with it. If further information is wanted it will have to be looked for under the heading given within parenthesis, where the name in question is mentioned, the small italic letter being added within parenthesis as a kind of cross-reference.

Under Māhishmatī we thus find the quotation " $\S 282b$  (Sahadeva)" followed by a remark concerning Māhishmatī. Further particulars must then be looked for under Sahadeva, where we read, " $\S 282$ : From Kishkindhā Shd. marched towards Māhishmatī (b) . . . ."

A small Greek letter indicates that the reference is chiefly of interest on account of the connection in which it occurs, and that further information will be found under the heading referred to within parenthesis, where the same Greek letter has likewise been added, within parenthesis, as a cross-reference.

Take, for instance, the reference given under Duḥṣāsana, "§ 83 (Ādivaṃṣāv.) a: I, 63, 2447" (or, I, 63a, 2447). Similarly, we find under Duḥsaha, "§ 83 (Ādivaṃṣāv.) a: I, 63, 2448." These references show that Duḥṣāsana and Duḥsaha are mentioned under the heading Ādivaṃṣāvatāraṇa, and that no immediate interest attaches to their being referred to in that place. The statement made under Ādivaṃṣāvatāraṇa runs, "§ 83: the 101 sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra . . . of whom 11 (a) . . . are enumerated as mahārathas." Here the a indicates that I have not thought it worth while to enumerate those 11 names (they must accordingly be looked for in the Sanskrit texts), but the passage in question has been referred to under the headings of each of them.

IV PREFACE.

To return to the quotation under Duhçāsana, "83 (Ādivamçāv.) a: I, 63, 2447."

The figures 63, 2447 refer to a passage where Duhçāsana is actually mentioned.

The small a shows that the mention of his name presumably is of little or no general importance, and may be practically neglected from a mythological or legendary point of view.

If the reader nevertheless wishes to know the purport of the reference, the word given within parenthesis shows that information will be found under Adivamçavatārana, and one inspection under that heading will show that Duhçāsana is there only mentioned, among eleven of Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons, as a mahāratha.

The heading Adivamçavatarana, with or without one additional inspection of the Concordance under § 83, will at once show the reader who in his memory has a general idea of the contents of the Mahābhārata that the quotation has been taken from a kind of preface or introduction to the principal narrative of the Epos, which is placed after the sections where, not Vaiçampāyana, but Sauti is the speaker. According to his critical disposition he will, or will not, draw conclusions from this fact.

Mere comparisons have been marked by the addition of (iva) or the like.

The signs *, **, †, (†), ††, and (††) have a critical value. I have not, of course, allowed the book to be influenced by critical theories. I have only intended to draw attention to such facts as seem to be of critical importance. According to his disposition, the reader may or may not draw conclusions from those signs. The danger is that they may sometimes have been omitted through inadvertence.

The numbers of verses, in ordinary type, refer to the Calcutta edition; the numbers of chapters, in clarendon type, to the Bombay text. By using the Concordance it will be possible, with very little uncertainty, to calculate what verse in the Bombay edition corresponds to a given one in the Calcutta Mahābhārata.

The books are quoted in Roman numbers.

The enumeration of verses is, except where the heading is marked by an asterisk, intended to be complete, and I hope that it is so, at least with regard to all instances where there cannot be any doubt that the heading occurs as a name. In such cases, on the other hand, where it may have been a matter of subjective feeling during the reading whether a word should be considered as a proper name or as a mere laudatory epithet, I fear that there may be some incompleteness and inconsistency. Thus some synonyms of Agni and Arjuna, which will be found in Mr. Holtzmann's lists, have not been registered

There are also some other inconsistencies, sometimes voluntary, for the sake of convenience, sometimes involuntary, due to the fact that my work has extended over a very great span of time. These latter ones are faults for which I must ask indulgence, but I hope that they will not cause any serious misunderstanding or inconvenience. I do not now venture to correct them, lest the numerous cross-references should be imperilled.

The numerous synonyms, such as Kiritin for Arjuna, have, as a rule, been put together under the principal name; e.g. Kiritin, etc., under Arjuna. Such denominations as Kaurava, Kuruçreshtha, etc., have, however, been given separately in their proper places, the principal aim to be held in view with regard to them clearly being to be able to know easily what person is meant in each instance.

PREFACE.

In the case of such synonyms, and of articles the contents of which are unimportant, I have only quoted book and verse. In other cases I have usually also added reference to paragraph and chapter. Take, for instance, under the heading Arjuna, the quotation § 613 (Gadāyuddh.), IX, 32-33: 33, 1890, 1921. Here the explanatory addition (Gadāyuddh.) refers the reader to the heading Gadāyuddhaparvan, where a summary of the narrative in question will be found under Book ix, chapters 32-33. The quotation 33, 1890, 1921 indicates the places where the name Arjuna actually occurs.

In some cases the summary of the narrative has also, for the sake of convenience, been repeated, in a more or less abridged form, under the special heading; thus, in our present case, under Arjuna.

In these, probably not very numerous, cases the reference to the paragraph is only necessary in order to get an idea of the wider connection in which the quotation occurs. In other instances the exposition must almost entirely be looked for in the paragraph quoted. Thus in the case of the quotation §§ 254-260 (Khāṇḍavadah.), I, 222-234, under the heading Arjuna. Here the narrative will be found in §§ 254-260 under the heading Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan. By referring to the Concordance, under the same paragraphs, the place which the narrative occupies in the epic as a whole will immediately be seen.

By arranging in numerical order, i.e. in the order of the Concordance, the paragraphs as given in the Index, we should obtain a synopsis of the contents of the whole epic, in the order of the original. Essentially the same result may be obtained from the article Arjuna, where I have introduced more repetitions (i.e. statements which are also found under other headings) than in any other article.

With regard to repetitions, I have thought it more important to enable the reader to use the Index conveniently and without unnecessary waste of time, than to save space. I have not, therefore, strictly avoided them in the principal articles, though I have done so in most cases by referring to paragraph articles and to the headings under which the quotations concerned are first given.

The text on which the Index is based is, on the whole, the Calcutta edition. Readings from other sources (i.e. almost exclusively the Bombay edition) have only been noticed for special reasons.

In transliterating the Sanskrit words, it will be noticed that I have followed the order of the Latin alphabet, without paying any attention to discritical marks. I have adopted the usual system of transliteration, with some modifications. Thus the palatal mute is given as c, ch being reserved for the corresponding aspirate; j is the palatal media, and y the corresponding semi-vowel. The palatal and cerebral s-sounds have been transliterated c and sh respectively.

The only exception from the strict adherence to the arrangement in accordance with the Latin alphabet is that the letters c and r have been treated as separate letters and placed after c and r respectively. This has been done because these sounds are often transliterated as  $\dot{s}$  and  $r\ddot{s}$  respectively.

In the CONCORDANCE it will be noticed that the mutual relationship between the two divisions in paragraphs and chapters has been indicated in various ways. My principal aim has here been to save space and trouble.

Where the paragraphs are separated from the synopsis of chapters and verses, the headings to which they belong in the Index have simply been printed after the other indications relating to them. E.g., § 19 (giving the contents of Mhbhr. I, 5, 1–11) will be found under the heading 'Bhrgu.' Where the paragraphs are not so separated, it should be generally understood that the title of the minor parvan to which a paragraph belongs is also the heading under which it will be found in the Index. E.g., § 249 (Mhbhr. I, 215) under the heading 'Arjunavanavasaparvan.' If this is not the case, the paragraphs are to be found in the Index under the titles of those chapters of the parvan in question which have been printed with spaced type. E.g., § 177 (Mhbhr. I, 113) under the heading 'Pāṇpudigvijava,' § 161 (Mhbhr. I, 96) under the heading 'Mahābhishopākhyāna,' and not under 'Sambhavaparvan.'

My sincere thanks are due to those who have helped me with their advice or have in other ways shown their interest in my work. In this connection I beg to mention Professor V. Fausböll, Professor K. F. Geldner, Professor Ch. R. Lanman, Dr. Sten Konow, and Dr. G. A. Grierson. The valuable suggestions made by Professor Lanman have, in many respects, left material traces in the arrangement of the Index, and certainly rendered it much more convenient and useful to the student than would otherwise have been the case. My young friend Mr. Elof Olesen deserves my warmest thanks for the care and sagacity with which he has assisted me in the revision of the manuscript.

Finally, I tender my respectful thanks for the pecuniary assistance which has rendered the compilation of this work possible, viz., the very liberal support which I have received from the Carlsberg Fond at Copenhagen, and from the Danish Government and the Danish Parliament.

[Abhimanyuvadhaparvan(va)] ("the section including the slaughter of Abhimanyu," the 73rd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Abhimanyuvadha). § 593: The 13th day: Broken by Arjuna, and Drona having failed to seize Yudhishthira, the Kurus were regarded as defeated; they heard all praising Arjuna and Krehna. Next morning Duryodhana blamed Drona for not having seized Yudhishthira: Drong said that even D., As., G., Y., N., and Ra. cannot defeat the force protected by Arjuna and Krehna, save Mahadeva; but to-day he would slay a mighty car-warrior. The Samçaptakas challenged Arjuna and took him away to the southern side of the field. Abhimanyu's slaughter by Duhcāsana's son is alluded to by Sanjaya. Dhrtarāshtra grieves. Sanjaya relates (VII, 33). Sanjaya praises Yudhishthira, etc. (a). Drona had formed the great circular array (cakravyūha): Lakshmaņa (the grandson of Dhrtarāshtra) at their head; Duryodhana, etc. ( $\beta$ ) in the middle; at the head the commander Drona, etc. (7) (VII, 34). The Pandavas were headed by Bhimasena: Salyaki, etc. (8) & Drona, whom the Pañealas and the Srnjayas could not approach. Yudhichthira says that only Abhimanyu, etc. (c), can break the array of Drona, and orders Abhimanyu to do it; Bhima, etc. (5) followed him; praised by Yudhishthira, who says that the protectors of Drona's host resemble S., R., M., V., or Agni, or Aditya, Abhimanyu orders his charioteer Sumitra to urge the steeds towards Drona's army (VII, 35). Abhimanyu (with Sumitra), etc., & Drona, etc.; Abhimanyu breaks that part of the Kuru army; many steeds of the Vandyu, etc. (7), breeds were deprived of their ornaments, and caused delight to Ra., etc. (VII, 36). Duryodhana & Abhimanyu; Drona, etc. (6) & Abhimanyu rescuing Duryodhana; Duhsaha etc. (1), & Abhimanyu, who slew the heir of Açmaka Karna, etc.  $(\kappa)$ , & Abhimanyu, who slew Sushena, etc.  $(\lambda)$ , and defeated Calya; Drona's troops fled; P., D., Ca., Si., etc., glorify Abhimanyu (VII, 37). Abhimanyu slays Çalya's younger brother, whose followers fled. Abhimanyu, with the weapons he has received from Krshna and Arjuna, defeats all the warriors that encounter him. Drona's army fled (VII, 38). Abhimanyu & Drona, etc. (µ). Drona says that Abhimanyu delights Yudhishthira, etc. (v). Duryodhana told Karna, etc. (f), to crush Abhimanyu, whom they attacked: Duhçasana & Abhimanyu (VII, 39); Abhimanyu addresses Duncasana (mentioning the dice, etc.); Duncasana is borne away by his charioteer; the Pandwole, etc. (c), uttered leonine shouts, and attacked Drona's array. Karna (urged by Duryodhana) & Abhimanyu (desirous of proceeding towards Drone); when Karne is in great distress his younger brother encounters Abhimanyu (VII, 40) Abhimanyu slays Karna's younger brother; Karna flies; the Kaurava array breaks, except the Sindhu-king (VII, 41). Yudhishthira, etc. (#), endeavour to follow Abhimanyu. Jayadratka checks them with celestial weapons. Dhrtardshtra enquires of Banjaya about the source of Jayadratka's energy; Sanjaya narrates the boon obtained by Jayadratha from Civa (VII, 42). Jayadratha vanquishes all the Pandava leaders with his steeds of the Sindhu-breed: Salyaki, etc. (p); Bhims mounts the car of Satyaki; the path made by Abhimanyd inclinad up, åbhira—Acala.

notwithstanding the Mateyes, etc. (s); they are all checked by Jayadratha (VII, 43). Abhimanyu vanquished Vrehasena, who was borne away from the battle, and slew Vasatiya and many others (VII, 44). Abhimanyu soized Satyaçravas and routed the Kurus: Rukmaratha (the son of Calva) & Abhimanyu, who slew him and his friends (100 princes) with the Gündharea-weapon (b), though they were assisted by Duryedhana, who was filled with fear and fled (VII, 45). Drona, etc. (7), & Abhimanyu, who beats them back except Lakshmana (who is followed by Duryodhana), who is slain. Duryodhana urged the troops to slay Abhimanyu; Drona, etc. (v), encompassed Abhimanyu, who seeks Jayadratha; Kratha's son was slain, the others fled (VII, 46). Drona, etc. ( $\phi$ ), & Abhimanyu + Yudhishthira supporting Jayadratha; Karna has one ear cut off; Abhimanyu slew Vrndaraka and Brhadbala (VII, 47); Abhimanya once more pierced Karna in the ear, and slew the son of the Magadha-king, and Acvaketu, and the Bhoja prince of Marttikavata (bearing the device of an elephant); the son of Duhçasana & Abhimanyu; Açratthaman & do.; Abhimanyu & Calya, who mounts another car; Abhimanyu slew Çatrunjaya, etc. (x); Abhimanyu & Çakuni, who tells Duryodhana to take counsel with Drona and Krpa, etc., about the means of slaying Abhimanyu; Karna asks Drong about the means of slaying Abhimanyu; Drong, saying that he is gratified by Abhimanyu's prowess, tells Karna, who is very afflicted with arrows, to cut off his bow, etc. Karna then cut off Abhimanyu's bow, Krtavarman slew his steeds, and Krpa slew his two Parshni charioteers; Abhimanyu, then attacked by six car-warriors, fights with the sword, which is cut off by Drona, while Karna cut off his shield (VII, 48); then Abhimanyu fought with a wheel; then with a mace; Abhimanyu & Açvatthaman; Abhimanyu slew (? apothayat) Subala's son Kūlikeya, and slow 77 Gundhara followers of his, and 10 Brahma-Vasaliyas (punar Brahma-Vasaliyan, C.; B. has punaç caiva Vasatiyan), 7 Kaikayas (Kaikayanam, C.; B. has Kekayānām), and 10 elephants; Abhimanyu & Duhcdsana's son, who slays Abhimanyu. Invisible creatures censure the cowardly act of the Kurus headed by Drong and The Pandava divisions fly, but are rallied by Yudhishthira (VII, 49). In the evening the Kurus withdrow to their encampment. Rā. and Pç., etc., on the field of battle (VII, 50). Yudhishthira laments on the fall of Abhimanyu (VII, 51).- § 594: Vyāsa comes and consoles him ("deuth takes all: D., Da., G., without exception"), relating to him the ancient story of what Narada had said in days of old to Akampana (q.v.). "This story is purifying, etc.; cast off thy grief; Abhimanyu has attained to heaven; sprung from Soma, he has disappeared in the lunar essence, cleansed from all his impurities" (VII, 54) .- § 595: Vyāsa recites to Yudhishihira the story of Spiijaya (q.v.), to whom Narada told Shodaçarijika (VII, 55-70). Vyāsa says that Abhimanyu has attained to that eternal goal which is attained by Yogine, and those that are living in heaven never prefer this world to heaven; "it is the living that stand in need of our grief, and not those who have attained to heaven; his sins increase for whom the living grieve." Then Vyasa disappeared, and Yudhishthira became free from grief; but-"what shall we say to Arjuna?" (VII. 71).

Abhīra, a people in the west of India upon the Indus (II, 32, 1192: Cadra<sup>o</sup>) (Digvijayap.); are conquered by Nukula at his Digvijaya (ib.); bring tribute to Yudhishthira (II, 51, 1832) (Dyūtap.). Mārkaṇḍcya prophesies that in the Kali-yuga there shall be many Abhīra and other barbarous kings (III, 188, 12840) (Märkandeyas.). The Abhīras are mentioned by Safijaya in the enumeration of the people of Bharatavarsha, VI, 9, 354, 375 (Cadrao) (Jambukh.) (cf. Acleshā (No. 43; cf. No. 44), a nakshatra (the ninth when beginning with AcvinI; its star of junction is supposed to be c Hydræ; v. Sū° Si°, p. 188). XIII, 64, 3262 (C. has Λ°, B. A°) (Anuçüsanik.) (°yan tu yo rüpyam rshabham vä praydochati sa sarrabhayanirmuktah sambharan adhitishthati; "nakshatrayogasya danakalpam," 63, 3212); 89, 4259 (who gives a çıaddha "açleshayam" procreates intelligent sons) (çrüddhakalpe); 132, 6162 (Ânuçüsanik.) (C.: kārttike māsi caçleshā bahulaç cashtamī çiva. B. has bahulasyashtamī): on the 8th day of the dark half of the month Karttika, when the moon is in conjunction with Aclesha, a brahman, kshattriya, vaiçya, or çūdra may, after having fasted at a craddha, after the setting of the sun, deposit an offering of black clothes and unguents with flowers in an ant-hill, begging the serpents to hand it over to the world-elephants to increase their strength that it may be equal to the strength of Vishnu, when he lifted up Earth; the formula is contained in vv. 7163-6; this he should do for a whole year.

Açleshāḥ (plur.) - No. 43: XIII, 110, 5392 (Ānuçāsanik.) (description of a candra wrate or religious performance with reference to the moon in the month Margaçīrsha, when the moon is in conjunction with the asterism Mula; the explanation of Nilakantha runs thus: - Here is described a candra erata to obtain a desired object; on the 1st day of the bright half of Margacirsha, when there is conjunction (of the moon) with the nakshatra Mula, one should begin this candra crata; it consists in locating the nakshatras in the limbs of the moon, Müla in his feet, etc., i.e , one should think of Müla together with its doity as being the feet of the moon; in like manner Rohipi, etc., with their deities are to be thought of as being his legs, etc.; everywhere the exchanging of the case-endings is a Vedic liberty; Ashādhā, Phalgunī, and Bhādrapadā represent each 2 nakshatras. The vrata is performed as follows: after one has had pronounced the wish of a lucky day, etc. (punyākarācanādipūrvakam), having taken upon one's self a religious exercise to obtain a desired object, one should fancy the moon and one's self to be one and the same, distribute the nakshatras together with their respective deities in the limbs of the moon, and day after day propitiate them by the muttering of Veda verses and oblations, etc. (japahomādinā), with the Veda verses required for each of them (tattanmantraih); thus one should go on until the day of the full moon, and when the vrata is at an end, one should present the butter (ghrta) left from the oblations to the teacher (ācārya); by the words "samāpte tu ghrtam dadyāt" it is indicated that ghṛta is the substance of the oblation. Thus doing even a cripple becomes well-shaped (sakalāngo) at the day of the full moon; this is expressed and exemplified by the sentence beginning with "paripārnānga." Açleshāh (C. ð, B. Ű) is to be identified with the nails). (The chapter is in C: called Angavidhi, in B. Dānadharma.)

Açramavāsa ' ("the dwelling in the hermitage") = Āçramavāsaparvan. § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 355 ("ākhyam parca). Açramavāsa<sup>2</sup> (do.) = Āçramavāsikaparvan. § 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 611 (°ākhyaṃ parva), 617 (do.).

[Acramavasaparvan] (" the section relating to the dwelling in the hermitage"), the 95th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. (cf. Agramavasa). § 787: Asked by Janamejaya how the Pandayas, having acquired their kingdom, conducted themselves towards Dhrtarüshtra, how Dhrtaräshtra and Gandhari behaved, and for how many years his grandfather ruled the kingdom, Vaicampayana said: The Pandavas ruled, placing Dhrtarāshtra at their head; Vidura, Sanjaya, and Yuyutsu used to wait upon Dhrtarashtra; for 15 years they did all things under the advice of the old king: Kunti obeyed Gandhari: Draupadi and Subhadra, etc., showed the utmost respect for the old king and his queen; the Pandavas surrounded the old king and his queen with every luxury, and Maireva wines, etc. Krva waited upon Dhrtarashtra; Vyūsa frequently visited him and recited historics of old R., celestial ascetics, P., and Ra.; Vidura, under the orders of Dhrtarashtra, superintended religion and law; through his policy the Pandavas obtained numerous services from their feudatories and followers; Dhytarashtra liberated prisoners and pardoned those condemned to death; the old king, on his pleasure excursions, was supplied with everything by Yudhishthira; the kings who came to Hästinapura waited upon Dhrtarashtra as before; Kunti, etc. (a), served Gandhari like maidservants; Bhimasena alone did not forget his grievances (XV, 1); Dhrtarashtra was honoured by R., and used to make gifts to the brahmans in rites for P. and graddhas for his sons, etc.; Dhrtarashtra also felt great affection for the Pandavas, and so did Gandharī; Gandharī performed graddhas with gifts; grieved at the remembrance of Duryodhana, Dhrtarashtra every morning blessed the Pandavas, wishing them victory in battle, etc. Yudhishthira became very much liked by all the four castes, and forgot the wrongs inflicted upon him by Dhrturashtra's sons; from fear of Yudhishthira nobody dared to speak evil of Duryodhana or Dhrtarashtra. Bhīma, however, reverenced the old king outwardly, with a very unwilling heart (XV, 2). While there was no variance in the cordiality between Yudhishthira and Dhrtarashtra. the latter could not but feel unfriendly towards Bhima, and Bhīma, recollecting his foes Duryodhana, Karņa, and Duhçüsana, indulged in boastful language about Duryodhana and his brothers whom he had slain. Gandhari was not moved. After 15 years Dhṛtarāshṭra, afflicted by the wordy darts of Bhīma, became penetrated with despair and grief; Yudhishthira, etc.  $(\beta)$ , did not know it. Dhrtarashtra opened his heart to his friends  $(\gamma)$ ; now he was observing a vow of fast, which he had concealed from Yudhishthira, lying on the carth clad in deerskin; Gandhari observed similar vows: now he asked Yudhishthira's permission for himself and Gandhari to retire into the woods clad in rags and bark in order to practise austerities. Yudhishthira lamented (2) ("Let Yuyutsu be made king; I shall go into the woods' but Dhrtarashtra's resolution remains unaltered; he asked Sanjaya and Krpa to speak for him to Yudhishthira; leaning on Gandhari he looked like one deprived of life; Yudhishthira lamented (e), and gently rubbed Dhrtarashtra's breast and face with cold water and revived him by the touch of his hand, on which were jewels and medicinal herbs. Dhrtarashtra said that the touch of Yudhishthira was highly gratifying, embraced him, and smelt his head; Vidura, Kunti, etc., wept: Gündhüri bore her sorrow with fortitude. Dhrtarüshtra renewed his request; Vyasa came (XV. 3) and asked [Åçramavāsaparvan.]

Yudhishthira to permit Dhrtarashtra to follow the path of all the ancient R.-r.; "Gändhärl bears her grief with fortitude." Yudhishthira yielded to Vyāsa's intercession; Vyāsa summed up the reasons for Dhrtarashtra's retirement (5), and then proceeded to the woods. Yudhishthira then said that he would conform to the advice of Vyasa, etc. (η) (XV, 4); Dhṛtarāshṭra, Gāndhārī, etc.  $(\eta)$ , entering the palace of Dhrtarashtra, ate a little. Then Dhrtarashtra gave Yudhishthira advice about how the latter should rule his kingdom (0) (XV, 5). Continuation (XV, 6). Continuation; agreeably to the science known to Uçanas, [arrays called] Cakața, Padma, and Vajra should be formed; "thou hast been instructed in all duties by Bhīshma, Kṛshna, and Vidura"; 100 horse-sacrifices and righteous rule are productive of equal morit (XV, 7). Yudhishthira gratefully accepted his instructions, as Bhīshma, etc. (1), no longer were there to instruct him. Dhrtarashtra wishes to depart soon, and Gandhari reminded him that he has got the permission of Vyāsa, and asks him when he would go to the forest with the permission of Yudhishthira; he wished first to make gifts for the advancement in the other world of his dead sons and other kinsmen (who were now pretas), and assembled all the subjects, while Yudhishthira brought all the articles necessary; Dhrtarāshtra, in a touching address, took leave of that large concourse of men of all the four castes  $(\kappa)$  (XV, 8), recapitulating the history of the realm from Cantanu downwards ( $\lambda$ ) (XV, 9). The citizens were exceedingly agitated upon hearing Dhrtarāshṭra's address; they charged the learned brahman Cāmba (B. Sāmba) with answering him  $(\mu)$ : "King Duryodhana never did us any wrong; we were well protected and ruled by him; we have also enjoyed great happiness for thousands of years under Yudhishthira, who follows the conduct of the R.-r. of old (Kuru, Samvarana, Bharata, etc.); the carnage on the field of Kurukshetra was not brought about by Duryodhana, Karpa, and Çakuni, nor by Dhrtarāshtra, but by Destiny, which in 18 days caused 18 akshauhinis to be destroyed by Bhishma, etc. (v); the Pandavas are capable of ruling without either thee or ourselves to look after them; Kuntī, etc. (f), will not do the least wrong to the people." Then Dhrtarushtra slowly dismissed the assembly, and entered his house with Gandhari (XV, 10). After that night had passed away, Dhrtarāshtra sent Vidura to Yudhishthira in order to announce that he would set out for the woods on the coming day of the full moon in the month of Karttika, and to solicit some wealth for performing the graddha of Bhishma, etc. (o). Yudhishthira and Arjuna applauded his words; Bhīma was unwilling, recollecting Duryodhana; Arjuna sought to pacify him, applauded by Yudhishthira; Bhīmasena maintained that gifts for Bhīshma, etc.  $(\pi)$ , should be given by thom, and by Kunti for Karna; "Let Duryodhana, etc., sink from a miserable to a more miserable position," reminding his brothers of the woes and disgrace inflicted upon them by those for whose benefit Dhrtarashtra asked for wealth  $(\rho)$ . Yudhishthira rebuked him (XV, 11). Arjuna urged Bhima to forget the injuries. Yudhishthira said to Vidura that he would give Dhrtarashtra so much wealth as he wished for the obsequies of his sons and Bhīshma, etc., and asked him to tell Dhrtarashtra not to be angry with Bhimasena (XV, 12). Vidura reported the speeches of Yudhishthira, Arjuna, and Bhima to Dhrtarashtra. Dhrtarashtra expressed his satisfaction, and set his heart on making large presents on the day of full moon in the month of Karttika (XV, 13). Dhrtarashtra invited thousands of deserving brahmans [and] superior R.

for Bhīshma, etc.; and made large gifts to them, naming Drona, etc. ( $\sigma$ ); tellers and scribes appointed by Yudhishthira ceaselessly ask the old king as to what should be given to each recipient that presented himself; unto him that was to receive 100 a 1000 were given, and he who was to receive 1000 was presented with 10,000 at the command of Yudhishthira; this was given by Dhrtarashtra for the benefit in the other world of his sons and grandsons, as also of himself and Gändhärl; the donation lasted for 10 days (XV, 14). On the day of full moon in the month of Karttika Dhrtarashtra (and Gandhari) summoned the Pandavas, caused the rites to be performed, and his sacred fire to be taken up. put on decrekins and bark, and set out with his daughtersin-law. The ladies uttered loud wails; Yudhishthira and Arjuna were pierced with grief; Bhimasena, etc. (7), all followed Dhrtarishtra; Kunti held on her shoulders the hand of Gundhurl, who walked with her bandaged eyes: Dhṛtarāshṭra walked behind Gāndhārī, placing his hand on her shoulder; Krshna, etc. (v), all proceeded with Dhrtarashtra; the citizens of all orders were as distressed as they had been at the departure of the Pandavas after the match of dice († 431-440) (XV. 15); Dhrtarüshtra left the city through the principal gate, and then asked those who followed him to desist. Vidura and Sanjaya retired with him into the woods; Krpa and Yuyutsu he caused to remain, and made them over to Yudhishthira. Kuntī retired with Dhrtarashtra, though Yudhishthira sought to dissuade her; she said: "Never show any disregard for Sahadeva: he is very much attached to me, and to thee also"; then she reminded him of Karna, etc.  $(\phi)$ ; Yudhishthira reminded her that she had herself formerly recited to them the story of Vidula, when they were about to set out from the town, and that they had won sovereignty guided by her words communicated through Krshna. Also Bhīma dissuaded her, pointing out the grief of the sons of Madri; but in vain. Draupadī and Subhadrā followed her, and so did the Pāṇḍavas with all their wives and attendants; Kuntī addressed them (XV, 16), assigning her reasons for her conduct  $(\chi)$  (XV, 17). The Pandavas and Draupadi then desisted from following her. The Pandavas circumambulated Dhrtaräshtra, etc., for taking their leave to return. Dhrtaräshtra (with Gandhari and Vidura) made a final effort of dissuading Kuntī from retiring into the forest with him, but in vain. The ladies set up a loud wail of grief. Hastinapura became plunged into sorrow: no festivals were observed. The Pandavas were without any energy. Dhrtarashtra arrived on the banks of the Bhagirathi and took rest there for the night among the brahmans, who there, like himself, ignited their sacred fires; arrangement of the beds of Vidura, etc.  $(\psi)$ ; the Yājaka brahmans, etc., of the king laid themselves down on their respective beds; that night seemed as delightful to them as a Brahmi night. When the night had passed away Dhrtarashtra, etc., going through their morning acts and rites, continue their journey (XV, 18). Following the advice of Vidura, Dhrtarashtra took up his shode on the banks of the Bhagirathi; many of the four orders came to see him; he gladdened them all by his words. At evening Dhrtarashtra, etc. (w), bathed in the stream, etc.; Kuntī led him and Gandhārī. Then he proceeded to Kurukshetra to the retreat of R.-r. Qatayupa (b), who received him with due rites; accompanied by him he proceeded to the retreat of Vyasa, where he received the initiation [into the forest life]; after having returned he took up his abode in the retreat of Catayupa, who instructed him in all the rites of the forest mode of life, at the command of Vyasa. Dhrtarashtra, etc. (eg), began to practise austerities (XV, 19). B. Nārada, etc.  $(\beta\beta)$ , came there and gladdened Dhrtarāshtra with discourses on religion. R. Narada mentioned the kings that attained to heaven after practising penances in that very retreat (γγ): Sahasracitya, Çailālaya, Prahadhra, Purukutsa, Cacaloman: "Thou also wilt, with Gandhari, through the grace of Vyasa, attain to a very high goal; dwelling in the presence of Indra, Pandu always thinks of thee, and will assist thee in the attainment of prosperity; Kunti, by serving thee and Gandhari, will obtain residence with her husband in the other world; we behold all this with our spiritual vision; Vidura will enter into Yudhishthira; Sanjaya will ascend to Heaven." Dhrtarashtra, etc., praised Nürada. Catayūpa asked Nārada what regions (lokāķ) will be acquired by Dhrtarashtra. Narada said: On a visit to Indra I saw Pāndu: Indra said that after three years Dhrtarāshtra and Gandhari would go to the abode of Kubera, on a car moving at will, and he would rove through the regions of D., G., and Rā.; this is a mystery of the gods. All the persons present (as also Dhrtarashtra) became highly pleased. Then they went away by the path of the Siddhas (XV, 20).-§ 788: The anxiety of the Pandavas and citizens about the fate of Dhrtarashtra, etc., and their despair when they reflected on that terrible slaughter of their kinsmen (a); only Parikshit somehow consoled them (XV, 21); afflicted with grief, they failed to derive pleasure from anything, nor did they attend to their kingly offices, thinking of Kuntī and Gandharī. They set their heart upon seeing Dhrtarashtra in his forest Sahadeva, lamenting the fate of Kunti, and expressing his longing to see her, proposed a visit to the woods, supported by Draupadi, who mentioned Kunti and Gandhari and Dhrtarashtra. Yudhishthira caused his army to be equipped, ordered litters, etc., for the ladies, and proclaimed that they would march out to-morrow, permitting the citizens to follow them. The next morning they set out, then waited five days for such citizens as would accompany them, and then proceeded towards the forest (XV, 22), headed by Arjuna (on a car with white horses) and Krpa (description of the expedition); Bhīma on a gigantic elephant, the twins on two fleet steeds, the ladies in closed litters, scattering showers of wealth as they proceeded, headed by Draupadi. proceeded slowly. Yuyutsu and Dhaumya protected the city. They reached Kurukshetra, crossed the Yamuna, and approached the retreat of Dhrtarashtra (XV, 23). The Pandavas and their followers, alighting from their cars, walked on foot; the ascetics told them that Dhrtarashtra had gone to the Yamuna for his ablutions, etc., and pointed out the way to them. Sahadeva ran with speed towards Kunti; they both wept; she informed Gändhäri, and then advanted towards Yudhishthira, etc.  $(\beta)$ , dragging the childless old couple: the Pandavas fell down at their feet, and took from their hands the jars of water they were carrying. Yudhishthira presented all his followers one after another to Dhrtarashtra, mentioning their names and races. Dhrtarashtra rejoiced and went to his retreat that was applauded by Si. and Ca. (XV, 24). To the ascetics, who had come from various regions in order to see the Pandavas, Sanjaya pointed out each of them  $(\dagger \gamma)$ ; then Dhytarishtra asked  $(\dagger v. 660-674)$ (XV, 25) Yudhishthira about the welfare of the Pandavas and their devotion to P, and D.; Yudhishthira answered. enquiring after Vidura, who turned out to be engaged in penances, subsisting on air alone, and was now seen at a distance with matted locks, and gravel in his mouth, and exceedingly emaciated, naked, and besmeared with filth and dust; Vidura fled, pursued by Yudhishthira; at last he stood motionless in yoga, and entered the body of Yudhishthira. who felt that he had become stronger than before and had acquired many additional virtues and accomplishments, and recollected his own state before his birth among men; he had heard of yoga-practice from Vvasa. He desired to cremate the lifeless body of Vidura, but was prevented by an invisible voice which said, that in Vidura (who was Dharma) was Yudhishthira's body also, and that Vidura would attain to the regions (lokah) called Santānikāh. Yudhishthira came and informed Dhrtarushtra; all became filled with wonder. They passed that night under a tree (XV, 26), conversing on morality and wealth. The next morning they surveyed the retreat (description) and the other retreats in the forest. Yudhishthira made presents to the ascetics (specification); then he returned to Dhrtarashtra, etc. (8); many M.-r. (Çatayūpa, etc.) who dwelt in Kurukshetra came there, as also Vyäsa (XV, 27), who enquired after Dhrturashtra's, etc. (a), welfare, and told them who Vidura was, mentioning the curse of Dharma by Mandavya (with an expenditure of his penances); he was superior to Brhaspati and Cukra; and how Vyāsa had procreated him upon the soil of Vicitravīrva: he was Dharma in consequence of his practices of dharand and dhydna; from Dharma also Yudhishthira took his birth. Vyāsa says that he has come to show a wonderful effect of his own penances: "what dost thou wish to see, or ask, or hear?" (XV, 28).

Acvamedhika(m) parva(n) ("the section treating of the Horse-sacrifice," the 93rd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Açvamedhika(m) parva(n)). § 778: Vaiçampāyana said (XIV. 1): After Dhytarashtra had offered libations of water [to Bhishma], Yudhishthira fell down in grief on the bank of Ganga. Incited by Krehna, Bhima took him up, surrounded by the Pandavas; Dhytarashtra comforts him, saying that it is he and Gandhari who ought to grieve, and referring to Vidura's advice about abandoning Duryodhana and his warnings against Karna and Çakuni (XIV, 1). Krshna also exhorts him, referring to the duties of the kehattriyas expounded by Bhishma, Vyasa, Narada, and Vidura. Yudhishthira cannot forget the slaughter of Karna. Vyasa also comforts him (XIV, 2), and reminding him that D. and As. perform sacrifices, and that by sacrifices D. vanquished Da., he urged him to perform the Rajasaya, the Horse-sacrifice, the Sarvamedha, and the Naramedha; [especially] the Horse-sacrifice after the example of Rama Daçarathi and Bharata Daushmanti, and indicated to him a spot in the Himavat, where there was gold in abundance, left behind by the brahmans at the sacrifice of Marutta of the Karandhama race. Asked by Yudhishthira, Vyasa told the history of Marutta (XIV. 3) \* \* i.e. Samvartta - Maruttīya (b). Vaicampāyana said : † Yudhishthira was delighted at hearing the speech of Vydsa, and desirous of performing his sacrifices with those riches, he consulted with his ministers (XIV, 4-10). - § 779: Vaicampayana said: When Vyasa had concluded his speech. Krshna addressed Yudhishthira, saying that Yudhishthira's karman has not yet been annihilated, nor had his foes been subjugated-" How canst thou be ignorant of the enemies in thy own flesh?"-and related the history of Indra's war with Vrtra (b) (XIV, 11). Krshna then expounds that, as physical ailments and health depend on the distribution of the cold, warm, and windy [humours] of the body, so do the mental ailments and health depend on sattes, rajas, and tamas in the soul [mind]; happiness is overcome by sorrow. and sorrow by pleasure; Yudhishthira should not recall his past sorrows: Krshnā in the assembly, etc. (a); "the time has now come when thou must fight single-handed with thy mind" (XIV, 12); salvation is not attained by foregoing external things; Mrtyu (death) is [the thought] "mine," and the eternal Brahman is [the thought] "not mine"; as no creature is ever destroyed, ahimsa (absence of injury) may exist even when one has pierced [a creature's] body, and vice versa; († v. 339-341): † the yogin knows yoga to be the perfect way, on account of the practices of his many former births; quoting the old verses sung by Kāma: "no creature is able to destroy me without [resorting to] the [proper] methods [i.e. subjugation of all desires, practice of yoga, ctc.] . . . " (XIV, 13).—§ 780: Vaiçampāyana said: Thus Yudhishthira was consoled, exhorted by Vishtaracravas, etc.  $(\beta)$ ; and having again performed the obsequial rites for his relatives, etc., he ruled the earth. He said to Vyasa, Narada, etc., that he would now perform the sacrifice, and said that they would go to the Himalaya under the protection of Vyāsa [to fetch the gold], according to the words of Vyāsa, D.-r. Nārada, and Devasthana. Then M.-r. took leave of Yudhishthira, Krshna, and Arjuna. A short time passed away while they performed their purifications after Bhishma's death, and gave large gifts to the brahmans as craddha (aurddhvadehikam) to the Kurus Bhishma, Karna, etc., accompanied by Dhrtarashtra, and then they entered the city of Hastinapura (XIV, 14). - § 781: Asked by Janamejaya what Krehna and Arjuna did when the Pandavas had reconquered and pacified their kingdom, Vaicampayana suid: When the Pandava-kingdom had been conquered and pacified K. and A. travelled with great pleasure amidst picturesque sceneries, like Indra and his wife (?, so PCR.) (deveguaran) in heaven, or like the Agvine in Nandana, and [then] entered the palace of Indraprastha in great merriment, reciting the genealogies of R. and gods, etc., and Krehna consoled Arjuna for the death of his relatives (a). It was long since he had seen Fasudeva, Baladera, and the Frenniheroes; he, therefore, asked leave to go to Draravati, and to accompany him to Yudhishthirs and apprise him of his departure. († v. 404-6): Arjuna sorrowfully replied, "Be it so" (XIV, 15).

Adivamçavataranaparvan. § 70: I, 59. (a) Kathabandha: in the intervals of the duties of the snakesacrifico Vyāsa recited Mahābhārata.

- (b) Kathānubandha. § 70: I, 60. Hearing that Janamejaya was installed in the snake-sacrifice, Kṛshṇa Dvaipāyana went thither (his birth, growth, studies, dividing the Vedas into four parts, and his begetting of Pāṇḍu, etc., are mentioned) with his disciples, and asked by Janamejaya about the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas, he directed his disciple Vaiçampāyana to tell their story.
- (c) Bhūratasūtram. § 71: I, 61. Vaiçampāyana gives a survey of the history of the Pāṇḍavas.
- (d) Bhāratapraçamsā. § 72: I, 62. Janamejaya wishes to hear the Mahābhārata in full. Vaiçampāyana describes its virtues (v. 2320: Bhāratānam mahāj janma Mahābhāratam ucyate); Krshņa Dvaipāyana had attained his object in three years, rising daily and purifying himself and performing his ascetic devotions he had composed this Mahābhārata; he that gives away a copy of the Bhārata to one that asks for it does indeed make a present of the whole earth with her belt of seas. Vide Ādivamçāvatāraņa.

§ 84: I, 64. Jamadagni's son, after having twenty-one times destroyed the kshattriya race, began ascetic penances on the Mahendra mountain. A new kshattriya caste sprang from the kehattriya ladies and the brahmans. Description of the Krta yuga. Then the Daityas being repeatedly defeated by the Adityas and deprived of heaven, the Asuras began to be born on Earth in such numbers that the Earth became incapable of supporting herself, even with the united strength of the Pannagas (bhūtasattvaughah). The Earth then applied to Brahmán, who was surrounded by gods, brahmans, great Rshis, Gandharvas, and Apsarases. Brahmán appointed the gods, Gandhurvas and Apsarases, to he born on Earth in order to ease her of her burthen by destroying the Asuras. They agreed, and going to Vaikuntha they also prevailed upon Nārāyana to become incarnate.

Agastya, a rshi, brother of Vasishtha and son of Mitra and Varuņa; he is called Maitrāvaruņi ("son of Mitra and Varuna") and Kumbhayoni ("born in a jar") (see below): he once saw his ancestors hanging in a cave, and was urged by them to procure progeny; he then from the most beautiful parts of all animals created Lopamudra and let hor become the daughter of the king of Vidarbha; when he had married her he, in order to procure riches for her, applied successively to three kings, and then to the Danava Ilvala, who shaped his own younger brother into a he-goat that was digested by Agastya. Agastya hada son by Lopāmudrā named Drdhasyu or Idhmavāha. A. prevailed upon the Vindhya mountain to cease to increase in height "till he had returned from the South," and drunk up the Sea (and digested it), in order that the gods might overcome the Kalakeyas. § 382 (Agnstyop.): III, 96-9.—§§ 384-6 (do.): 101-5.—§ 183 (Pāṇḍu): I, 118, 4571 (he hunted and sacrificed wild beasts: A'h sattram asinaç oakara mṛgayam ṛshiḥ | aranyan sarvadaivatyān mṛgān prokshya mahāvane).—§ 210 (Sambhavap.): I, 139, 5524 (Drona's teacher Agniveça was a pupil of A. in the Dhanurveda). - § 233 (Svayamvarap.): 188, 7047 (all. to his drinking up the Sca).- § 236 (do.): 192, 7164 (°çastam diçam, the South).—§ 267 (Yamasabhav.): II, 8, 340 (in the palace of Yama). - § 270 (Brahmasabhāv.): 11, 439 (in the palace of Brahman).—§ 316 (Kirmīravadhap.): III, 11, 422 (sambhakshya jarayishyami yathagastyo mahasuram).- § 377 (Dhaumyatīrthak.): 87, 8316 (°sy-ācramavaro, in the East); 88, 8344 (°syacramah, in the South).— § 380 (Brahmasaras): 95, 8521 (Brahmasarottamam | A°o bhagavan yatra gato Vaivasvatam prati; cf. [Agastyopākhyāna.] § 382 (Tirthay.): In the city of Manimati there lived formerly a Daileya Ilvala, whose younger brother was Vatāpi (Prahradi, v. 8645). Ilvala, inflamed with wrath against all brahmans, because a brahmar had refused to grant him a son equal to Indra, used to transform Vatapi into a ram and offer his flesh to brahmans as food, and then to recall him to life (whomsoever Ilvala summoned with his voice would come back even from the abode of Yama), and Vatapi, ripping the flanks of the brahmans, would come out laughing. Thus they killed many bruhmans. Meanwhile Agastya saw his ancestors hanging in a hole with the heads downwards, and was asked by them to procure offspring to them. As he did not see any wife worthy of himself, he selected the most beautiful parts from various creatures and created an excellent woman, whom he caused to be born as the daughter of the Vidarbha king, who was then undergoing ascetic penances for obtaining offspring. She was named Lopamudra, and was very beautiful. When she attained to puberty no one dared to ask for her hand (III, 98). When Agastya asked the Vidarbha king to bestow her upon him, the king and his queen became much afflicted, but at her own request Lopamudra was bestowed upon Agastya, who immediately asked her to discard her ornaments and dress herself in regs and barks and door-skins and partake of his vows, and proceeding to Gangadrara they practised the severest penances. When at last he summoned her for marital intercourse she made it a condition that he should approach her on a bed like to that which she had in the palace of her father, and that both should be adorned with costly ornaments, and she told him to procure these things without impairing his ascetic merit (III, 97). Agastya then went to King Crutarran and asked him for wealth, but seeing that his expenditure was equal to his income, he took nothing, but, together with Crutarvan, went to King Bradhnagva, with the same result; then all three went to King Trasadasuu Paurukutsa of the line of Ikaheaku, with the same result. At the suggestion of the three kings they all four went to Ilvala (III, 98). Ilvala went out with his ministers to receive them on the confines of his domain. He prepared the flesh of Valapi in order to entertain them, at which the kings became sad, but Agastya ate it all, and when Ilrala summoned Vatapi there came only air out of Agastya's stomach, Vatapi having already been digested. Then Ilvala, becoming sad, promised to give them wealth if Agastya could tell him what he intended to give, and Agastya rightly said that he intended to give each of the kings 10,000 cows and as many gold coins, and to Agastys twice as much, and a car that would be found to be a golden one, with two steeds (Virava and Surava). The cur brought Agastya and the kings to Agastya's hermitage within the twinkling of an eye. Then the rajarshis went away to their cities. When Agastua proposed to Lopamudra to choose between 1000 sons, or 100 each equal to 10, or 10 each equal to 100, or 1 equal to 1000, she chose the last alternative. After she had conceived he retired into the forest. After seven years she gave birth to Drdhasyu, who came out as if repeating the Vedas with the Upanishade and Angas; and from carrying, while yet a child. loads of sacrificial fuel to the hermitage of his father, he was called Idhmardha. Agastya was highly pleased, and his ancestors obtained the lokas they desired .- § 384: In the krta age the Danava tribes named Kalakeyas under Vrtra pursued the gods under Indra. The gods, on the suggestion of Brahman, with Narayana at their head, proceeded to the hermitage of the rshi Dadhica on the other bank of Sarasvali. and having prevailed upon him to leave his body, they caused Trashtr to construct of his bones the six-sided (shadaçri) rajra which Trashir handed to Indra that he might slay Vrira with it (III, 100). In the encounter that ensued between the gods and the Kūlakeyas the gods were defeated, until Nardyana, the gods, and the brahmarshis had transferred their own vigour to Indra. He then hurled the vaira against Vrtra and slew him so that he fell headlong like the Mandara mountain hurled of yore from Vishau's hand; but Indra fled in fear, desiring to take shelter in a lake, thinking that the rajra had not been hurled from his hand and that Vrtra was still alive, while the gods defeated the Danavas, who fled to the depths of the sea. Here they conspired for the destruction of the three worlds, and resolved upon destroying all who were possessed of ascotic virtues (tapas), for so the universe would itself be destroyed, as it is supported by asceticism (III, 101). Remaining in the depths of the sea by day, the Kaleyas during the night slew the munic in the hermitages and sacred spots (punyechedyatanechu); in the hermitage of Vasishtha, 197 ascetics; in that of Cyavana, 100; in that of Bharadraja, 20, without being seen; every morning people saw the dead bodies and mutilated limbs of the munic and the disturbed agnihotras scattered on the ground. Men fied for their lives into all directions or killed themselves from fear. Some brave bowmen searched in vain for the evildoers. The gods with Indra repaired to Narayana (c) (III, 102). They did not know by whom the brahmans were being killed during the night. Vieless explained the whole affair to them.

and told them to apply to Agastya (Maitrararum) that he might dry up the sea, as no one else was capable of so doing. They then went to the hermitage of Agastya, and mentioned to him that he had delivered the gods from Nahusha and caused Vindhya to cease to increase in height (in competition with the Sun), the world having been covered with darkness (III, 103).- § 385: Vindhya (q.v.).- § 386: At the request of the gods Agastya, accompanied by rehis, gods, men, Uragas (enakes), Gandharvas, Yakshas, and Kimpurushas, approached the ocean (III, 104) and drank it up, to the amazement of the gods, who called him Vidhatr and the creator of the worlds, while the musical instruments of Gandharras were playing, and celestial blossoms were showered upon him. The Kāleyas, who had previously been burnt by the tapas of the munis, were now destroyed by the gods, except some few who, rending asunder the goddess Earth, sought refuge in Pātāla. The gods now asked Agastya to fill up the ocean again, but he had already digested the water. with Vishau came to Brahman and spoke to him about replenishing the sea (III, 105). Brahman dismissed them, saying that only after a long course of time the ocean would be brought to resume its wonted state by the agnates of king Bhagiratha.

The six wives of the Rshis were divorced by their husbands. Skanda is called the son of Rudra, because Agni is called Rudra by brahmans, and because he was produced by Rudra entering Fire (and Umā coalescing with Svāhā), etc., and the Cveta mountain was formed of Rudra's semen virile. Agni gave to Skanda a red cock, that formed his ensign perched on the top of his chariot. The six divorced wives of the Rehis, together with Vinata, obtained from Skanda that they became his mothers. At the request of Indra they (incl. of Vinata, see v. 14464 and Nīl., i.e. the Kyttikās) were placed among the Nakshatras (and presided by Agni) instead of Abhijit (q.v.). XII, 78, 2922): Brahmán had granted the Asura Türaka the boon that he could not be slain by gods, Asuras, Rakshasas, etc., and the deities had, in consequence of their cudeavour in former times to stop propagation, been cursed by Parvati, that they were not to have any offspring; but Agni had not been there; he therefore, said Brahmán. would beget an offspring for the destruction of Taraka, etc.: "Kāma is Rudra's seed, a portion of which fell into Agni, who will cast it into Ganga. Therefore, make a search for Agni. Agni is the most eternal of all creatures; he is older than Rudra himself," etc. After searching in vain every part of the universe, the gods successively learnt from a frog that had been scorched by the energy of Agni that he was residing in the nethermost regions of the water; from an elephant, that he was within an acvattha tree; and from a parrot, that he had entered the heart of a cami tree. All frogs, elephants, and parrots were cursed by Agni and blessed by the gods in various ways: the cami tree the gods made a sacred fuel fit for producing fire in all religious rites; the heated waters that are found in the nethermost regions are vomited forth by the mountain springs. Agai then united himself in spiritual congress with Ganga, who, being unable to bear the seed, cast it off resplendent like gold on the breast of Meru, on a forest of reeds. Hence Agni was called Hiranyarctas; Earth, Vasumati: the child, Skanda and Guha, and, because it was nursed by the Krttikas, Karttikeya; gold, Jatarupa. It was in this way that gold came into existence as the offspring of Agni: gold is truly the illustrious Agni, the lord of all things, and the foremost of all Prajupatis; the most sacred of all sacred things is gold; it has for its essence Agni and Soma. In days of yore (lokadau, v. 4163) Rudra (who is Brahman, Civa, Rudra, Varuņa, Agni, Prajūputi, etc.), having assumed the form of Varuna (cf. v. 4133, Varunah, Pavanatmakah), performed a sacrifice to which came the munis and all the deities with Agni, etc.; the Lord of all himself poured libations into his own self. Seeing "decapatnyaç ca kanyaç ca devanan cairs matarah," the seed (endowed with Sattva, Rajus, and Tamas) of Brahman fell upon the Earth; Pushan took it up, and it was taken with the sacrificial ladle and poured as an oblation-into the fire; thence Bruhman caused the different beings to spring into existence. From the flames

(bhrg) arose Bhrgu, etc. . . from the ashes, the Vaikhānasas, honoured by the ganas of brahmarshis; from his (Agni's, PCR.) tears, the Acvins; from his organs of sense (erotobhyas B., i.e. cars, etc.), the rest of the Prajapatis (prajanam patayak), the Rshis from his pores, etc. For this reason Agni is said to be all the doities; the pieces of wood are the months, etc.; his bile (pittam) is day and night (B. somewhat differently): "Raudram lohityam ity ahur, lohitat kanakanı emptanı | tan Maitram iti vijüsyanı, dhumas ca Vasavah smrtah" (v. 4130); the flames are the Rudras and Adity as; the planets, stars, etc. (Nil.), are the charcoal; "ādikartā ca lokasya tat param brahma tad dhrucam | sarvakāmadam ity ahus, tad rahasyam uraoa ha" (v. 4132). Bhrau was considered as the offspring of Varuna, Angiras as that of Agni, Kavi as that of Brahman; Bhrgu, Angiras, and Kavi were all of them prajanam palayah; their offspring (v. 4144-52) are called Varunah, and Kavi and Bhrgu, Varunau. Agni is Brahmán, Pacupati, Sarva, Rudra, Prajūpati; gold is the offspring of Agni (v. 4164); when fire is not obtainable gold is used as a substitute by a Jamadagnyah (" one that knows the identity of gold with fire," PCR.) Pramanajño vedaçrutiridarçanat (v. 4165), etc. (v. 4166-7); Agni sprang from Brahmán, and from Agni sprang gold (v. 4168); those persons observant of righteousness who make gifts of gold are regarded as giving away all the deities (v. 4169), etc.; he who makes a gift of gold at the second twilight succeeds in attaining to a residence with (salokyan) Brahmán, Vāyu, Agni, and Soma (v. 4173), and in the regions of Indra (sendreshu saiva lokeshu, v. 4174), etc.; he has never to fall down from the regions to which he attains (na ca keharati tebhyaç ca, v. 4176). By haspati had expelled his younger brother Samvartta, and in allegiance to Indra refused to perform sacrifico for his rival Marutta. Narada then told Marutta to appeal to Samvartta, who was wandering about in the garb of a mad man; he was to prevail upon him to perform his sacrifice, and tell him that Narada had entered into the fire; Samvartta consented to perform his sacrifice, not from any desire of wealth, but only that he might do what was disagreeable to Indra and Brhaspati. Marutta succeeded in obtaining from Civa the gold on Munjavat, and made arrangements for the sacrifice. Brhaspati became sick with iculousy, and Indra therefore despatched Agni to Marutta to say that Brhaspati would officiate at his sacrifice and make him immortal, etc. But Marutta answered that he did not desire these things, and Samvartta threatened to burn Agni with his ficrog evil (darunena) eyes if he should ever come again. At last Indra himself directed the sacrifice. Indra told Marutta to offer a red bull consecrated to Agni, and a blue with a variegated skin to V.-D. [Agniparabhava(h)] ("the defeat of Agni"), a part of Khandavadahanaparvan. § 255: I, 223, 8094-8156. Questioned by Janamejaya why Agni desired to consume the forest of Khandava, Vaicampayana related: It has been heard in the Purana that King Cvetaki performed sacrifices so incessantly that his rtvijes left him, their eyes being afflicted with the continued smoke; he then had his sacrifice completed by other rtvijes. He then desired to perform another sacrifice. which should extend over 100 years. But he could not obtain any priests to assist him; they told him to apply to Rudra. He then went to Kailasa, and by observing the most rigid austerities he prevailed upon Rudra that his sacrifice should be completed, on the condition that he could for twelve years without intermission pour libations of clarified butter into the fire, himself leading all the while the life of a brahmacarin. When this had been done Rudra said that he would not himself assist at the sacrifice, which properly belonged to the brahmans; but he caused Durvāsas (b) to complete it. [When the time came Cvetaki ascended to heaven (Svarga) with the rtvijes and sadasyas who had helped him in life, B.] But Agni became sick, because he had drunk clarified butter for twelve years, and applied to Brahmán. Brahmán told him to consume the forest of Khāndava, that abode of the enemies of the gods, which he had of old once burnt to ashes at the request of the gods, together with its living population; then he would regain his own nature. Seven times Agni, assisted by Väyu, set the forest on fire; but the inhabitants extinguished the fire (the elephants bringing water in their trunks, and the Nagas in their hoods, etc.) (I, 223).—§ 256a: I, 224, 8157-8165a. Agni again applied to Brahman, who told him to solicit the old deities Nara and Nārāyaņa (now Arjuna and Krshņa) to aid him. Agniputra - Skanda: IX, 2550-4.

[Aishīkaparvan] ("the section relating to the Aishīka weapon"), the 84th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.. cf. Aishīka. § 617: The driver of Dhrshtadyumna's chariot, who had managed to escape from Krtavarman at a time when he was heedless, informs Yudhishthira, in the morning, of the extermination of his army. Yudhishthira falls down on the earth; Sātyaki holds him in his embrace; Bhīma, etc. (a), stretch forth their arms. Having recovered his senses Yudhishthira laments (3), and despatches Nakula to bring thither DraupadI and the ladies with her; then he proceeds to view the slaughter in his camp, and falls down on the earth with all his followers (X, 10). Draupadī arrives from Upaplavya, falls down in the presence of Yudhishthira, is comforted by Bhīma, addresses Yudhishthira  $(\gamma)$ , and resolves to sit in Prāya, if the Pāṇḍavas do not slay Açvatthāman. Yudhishthira urged her to forget her sorrows, as Açvatthāman is not to be found. Draupadī insists on Açvatthāman's slaughter and the depredation of the gem on his head, appealing in particular to Bhimasena (8). Bhimasena, making Nakula his charioteer, sets out in pursuit of Acvatthaman, guided by the track of the latter's car-wheels (X, 11). Krshna urges Yudhishthira to make arrangements for the safety of Bhima, as Acvatthaman has the Brahmaciras (b) weapon capable of exterminating all foes (X, 12). The Pandavas, with Krshna, proceed on the track of Bhīmasena: Krahna, Arjuna, and Yudhishthira on Krahna's car with steeds of the Kamboja breed: Caibya on the right. Sugriva on the left, Meghapushpa and Balahaka being parshnivahas, the standard having been made by Viçvakarman and standing high like Maya, with Garuda. They in vain ask Bhīma to stop. They find Acvatthaman sitting with Vyasa on the bank of Ganga in the midst of many R.; he is attired in a piece of cloth made of Kuca-grass, etc. . . . . He consecrates a blade of grass with Mantras, and converts it into that powerful celestial weapon, and throws it off with the words "for the destruction of the Pandavas" (X, 13). Urged by Krshna, Arjuna shoots the [Brahma, PCR.] weapon imparted to him by Drona, which was capable of neutralizing all weapons. Extraordinary portents appear in nature. Nārada and Vyāsa, trying to save the three worlds, stand between the two fires (X, 14). Arjuna withdraws his weapon; but Acvatthaman is incapable of withdrawing his, as no person of uncleansed soul can bring it back, after it has once been let off, but only a brahmacarin (and such a one is Arjuna); otherwise it strikes off his own Vyāsa praises Arjuna for not having before used the Brahmaçirus weapon; "that region where Brahmaçiras is baffled by another high weapon, suffers a drought for twelve years"; he proposes to him to give the Pandavas the gem on his head; then the Pandavas would in return grant him his life. Acvatthaman surrenders his gem, whose wearer ceases to have any fear from weapons, etc., and from D., Da., and N., and Ra.; the weapon he throws into the wombs of the Pandava women (X, 15). Krshna says that a brahman at Upaplavya has said to Uttara, "while the Kuru line will become extinct, a son will be born to thee, and he will for that reason be called Parikshit." Acvatthaman says that his words could not but be fulfilled. Kṛshna says that the feetus will die, but be recalled to a long life; but Açvatthāman shall wander for 3000 years alone, and without being able to talk to anyone; the stench of pus and blood shall emanate from him, and inaccessible forests and dreary moors shall be his abode; he shall wander over the earth with the weight of all diseases on him. Parikshit shall learn the use of all weapons from Krpa and rule the earth for sixty years; Krshna will revive him. Vyāsa approves of Krshna's curse. Acvatthaman proceeds to the forest. The Pandavas with Krshna, Vyāsa, and Nārada, taking with them the gem, come to Draupadī, who is sitting in Prāya. Bhīma comforts Draupadī  $(\eta)$ . Draupadī asks Yudhishthira to place upon his head the gem taken from Acvatthaman. Yudhishthira asks Krshna (X, 16) about the true cause of Açvatthaman's success in destroying the Pandava army  $(\theta)$ . Krshna ascribes it to the aid of Mahadeva, and relates that when Brahman, desirous of creating, saw Rudra, he asked him to create. living creatures: Rudra promised to do so, and plunged into the waters and practised austerities. Then Brahman called into existence another being in order to make him the creator of living creatures, and he created Daksha, etc.; but they ran towards their creator from hunger, desirous of devouring him, and he repaired to Brahman, who assigned herbs, etc., as their food, and the weak beings to the strong ones. The creatures multiplied. Then Rudra rose from the water, became angry, and caused his productive limb to disappear in the earth. He had created food (herbs and plants) for all these creatures. Then he went away, in cheerlessness And rage, to the Munjavat mountains in order to practise severer austerities (X, 17). After the Krta-age the gods prepared a sacrifice, but not knowing Rudra truly they assigned no share to him. Rudra constructed a bow of two of the four kinds of sacrifices (v. the note of PCR., p. 58), and came as a brahmacarin to the sacrifice; the earth shrank with fear, etc.; Rudra pierced the sacrifice in the heart; it assumed the shape of a deer and fled away with Agni, pursued by Rudra through the skies; the gods were stupefied; Rudra with his bow broke the arms of Savit; and plucked out the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Pūshan; the gods uttered a cry; the string of his bow burst; the gods and the sacrifice gratified Rudra; he threw his wrath into the water; that wrath, assuming the form of fire, is always employed in consuming the water. He then gave unto Savit; his arms, to Bhaga his eyes, and to Pūshan his teeth, and restored the sacrifice. The gods assigned to him all the libations of clarified butter as his share (X, 18).

Ajagaraparvan ("the section relating to the soa"; the 40th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 448: The Pundavas spont four years with Arjuna in the gardens of Kubera, which added to the preceding six make ten years of exile. In the eleventh year Yudhishthira, advised by Bhima, took leave of those regions, determining again to practise austerities on the mountain, when he had regained his kingdom; and after Lomaça had returned to the abode of the gods, they with the brahmans proceeded along that very road, carried by Ghatotkaca and his followers, and advised also by Arshtishena (III, 176).- § 449: Having crossed Kailāsa, they passed one night in the hermitage of king Vrshaparvan (b), then one month at Badari, seeing Kubera's (c) favourite lake (nalinim), then crossing the land of Cina, Tushara, Darada, and all the regions of Kulinda, and the difficult Himalaya regions, they reached the city of the Kirāta king Subāhu, where they met with their charioteers Viçoka, etc., and their servants Mahendrasena, etc., the cooks and servants of the kitchen. After having stayed there one night, they, dismissing Ghatotkaca and his followers, with the charioteers and chariots reached "the king of mountains" near Yamuna (Yamunam adrirojam, i.e. Yamunodgamam, Nil.; "name of a mountain," BR.), where they dwelt for one year, occupied with hunting, in the forest Vicakhayupa. There in a cavern Bhīma was seized by a snake and rescued by Yudhishthira. In the twelfth year of their exile they repaired thence to the borders of the desert, and desirous of dwelling by the Sarasvati (d), they went there, and thence reached the lake of Dvaitavana (III, 177) .- § 450: At the request of Janamejaya, Vaicampāyana detailed how Bhīma, when they had come from the rajarshi Vrshaparvan's hermitage, was hunting with unpoisoned (cuddhair) arrows on some spots of Himavat (b), was seized by a huge snake, and on account of a boon that had been granted to the scrpent was quite unable to extricate himself (III, 178). The serpent said that he was the rajarshi Nahusha, the son of Ayu, whom Agastya had cursed to become a serpent, out of compassion, however, adding to his curse that the person who would be able to answer his questions would deliver him, and that even stronger beings would, when seized by him, lose their strength. He had retained his recollection of his former existence, and nobody who came within his reach at the sixth division of the day (? shashthe kule: ashtadhu vibhaktasyuhne bhage, Nil.) could escape him. Bhima lamented. appeared dreadful omons to Yudhishthira there, and having learnt from Draupadi that Bhima had long been out, he set out with Dhaumya, having directed Arjuna to protect Draupadi, and Nakula and Sahadeva to protect the brahmans; and in the east, following the tracks of Bhīma, he came to the spot (III, 179). The scrpent told Yudhishthira who he was, refused other food instead of Bhima, but promised to deliver him if Yudhishthira could answer his questions. The first question was about the characteristics of the brohman, etc. (III, 180). Yudhishthira asked the sorpent some questions about the means of salvation, and some other moral and philosophical questions, about the difference between the mind (manas) and the intellect (buddhi), and what had caused Nahusha's fall. Nuhusha told that in heaven he used to exact tribute from brahmarshis, gods, Rakshasas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Pannagas, etc.; and that such was the spell of his eyes, that on whatever creature he fixed them he instantly destroyed its power; Agastya had foretold that Yudhishthira would save him from his curse. Ho delivered Bhima unhurt, and, assuming his celestial shape, went back to heaven. Yudhishthira returned with Dhaumya and Bhima, and narrated all that to the bruhmans, who censured Bhima, and warned him against attempting such things again (III, 181).

Ambopākhyāna ("episode relating to Ambā"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 336 ("am parva).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 516, i.e. Ambopākhyānaparvan.

[Ambopākhyānaparvan] ("the section containing the episode of Amba," the 66th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. Cf. Ambopākhyāna). § 573. Questioned by Duryodhana why he would not slay Cikhandin, Bhishma said: After Cantanu's death and Citrangada's demise, obedient to the counsels of Satyavati I installed, according to the ordinance, Vicitravirya as king. I repaired on a single car to the svayamvara of the daughters of the king of Kāçi: Ambā (the eldest), Ambika (the second), and Ambalika (the voungest), who were viryaçalkāh. Challenging all the kings, I took the three maidens upon my car, and repeatedly told my name to the kings, and vanquished them all. Then I came back to Hastinapura and made over those maidens, intending them for Vicitravirya, to Satyavati (V, 173). Satvavati became very glad. When the nuptials approached, Amba said that she had before mentally chosen the Calva king (the lord of Saubha, v. 6076, etc.) as her lord, and that he, without her father's knowledge, had privately proposed to her (V, 174). I then laid the matter before Satyavati and our counsellors (mantrin), rivijes, and purchitas, and permitted Amba to depart. She came to the city of the Calva king, escorted by a number of old brahmans, accompanied by her nurse. But he would no longer have her as his wife, because she was to be wedded to another. It was of no avail that she declared she had been carried away by force, weeping and against her will; for Calva was in terror of Bhishma. She cursed Bhishma, her father, herself (because she had not leapt down from Bhishma's car), Calva, and Dhatr (the creator). She resolved that her vengeance should fall upon Bhīshma. She repaired to a hermitage of ascetics (tapasab), and stayed there that night. There was the great brahman Caikhavatya, a proceptor in the scriptures and the Aranyakas (castre caranyake guruk) (V, 175). The ascetics counselled her to repair to her father's abode; but she would not, lest she should be slighted by her relatives; she wished to practise ascetic austorities. Then came her maternal grandfather, the Srajava king, the R.-r. Hotravahana, and advised her to go to Rama Jamadagnya, who would slay Bhishma in battle if Bhishma did not obey his behest; he always dwelt on the Mahendra mountain with R., G., and Aps. While they were speaking there appeared Akrtavrana, a dear companion of Rama: he said that Rama would come the next morning to see Hotravahana; Hotravahana related the history of Amba to Akrtavrana (V, 176). The next day Rama appeared with his disciples, his bow in hand, etc. (description). Ambā asked him to slay Bhīshma (V, 177). Rama said he would not take up arms except at the command of brahmans. Akrtavrana supported the demand of Ambä. The next morning they all set out for Kurukshetra with the maiden, and quartered themselves on the banks of Sarasyati. On the third day Rama sent a message to Bhishma, who came and worshipped him. Rama demanded that he should bestow Ambā upon Vicitravīrya, which Bhīshma refused. Rāma threatened to slay him in battle; Bhishma said that Rāma had himself taught him the four kinds of arms (ishvastram caturvidham; see the note of PCR.); and quoted a cloka in the Purana, sung by Marutta (v. 7074). Having first gone to Hästinapura and represented everything to Satyavati, Bhishma set out for Kurukshetra on his car (description). Ganga ("worshipped by Si. and Cā," v. 7095) in vain endeavoured to make them desist (V, 178). Bhīshma asked Rāma to mount on a chariot; but Rama said that the earth was his chariot. the Vedas his steeds, the wind (Mataricvan) his charioteer, and the mothers of the Vedas (Vedamātarah; see the note of PCR.) his harness. Bhīshma saw him stationed on an excellent car (description), with Akrtavrana as his chariotecr. Bhishma propitiated Rama by worshipping him, on foot. The combat lasted for many days; at last Bhishma, from pity and reverence, would not strike Rāma any longer, and the combat ceased at sunset (V, 179). Next morning the battle was taken up again. Bhīshma's Vāyavya weapon was neutralized by Rāma's Guhyaka; Bhīshma's Agneya by Rāma's Vāruna. At a momentary swoon of Bhishma, Akrtavrana, Amba, etc., were filled with joy; then Rama fell into a swoon and dropped down; the ascetics and Amba comforted him. A conflagration was caused in the welkin. At evening Rāma withdrew (V, 180). The next day they fought again, and at evening they desisted (V, 181). The next day Bhīshma's charioteer was slain; Bhīshma, pierced by an arrow, fell down to the earth; eight brahmans supported him on their arms in mid-air; Ganga was seen on his car; she had controlled his steeds in the combat. Bhikhma dismissed her and fought till evening. When Rama for a moment lost his consciousness, Rahu enveloped the sun, etc. At evening the battle ceased; next day it was taken up again, and lasted for twenty-three days (V, 182). During the night the above-mentioned eight brahmans appeared to Bhishma in a dream, comforted him, and said that the weapon Prasvapa (Prajūpatyam Viçvakrtam, v. 7259; PCR., "appertaining to the lord of all creatures and forged by the divine artificer") would come to his knowledge, for it had been known to him in his former life; neither Rama nor any person on earth was acquainted with it; Rama would not be slain by it, but he would fall asleep; "then thou wilt awaken him with the weapon Sambodhana" (V, 183). Next day Akrtavrana must comfort Rama. Bhishma and Rama both used the Brahma weapon: the welkin seemed to be ablaze, and D., As., R., G., and Ra. were greatly afflicted, etc. Then the mantras for using the Prasvapa weapon suddenly came to Bhīshma's mind (V, 184). Voices in the sky (the gods) and Nārada forbade him to let off the Prasvāpa weapon against Rama, and the above-mentioned brahmans supported the words of Nārada. Beholding the Prasvāpa weapon withdrawn, Rama declared himself to be vanquished. Rama then beheld before him his father and father's futher, who forbade him any more to fight with kshattriyas, especially with Bhishma, whom the gods forbade to fight with Rama. "Arjuna has been ordained by Svayambhū to be the slaver of Bhishma." The ascetics with Rolks, Narada, Ganga, and the Pitrs succeeded in bringing about peace; the above-mentioned eight brahmans ordered. Bhishma to go to Rama, who, summoning Amba, said (V. 185) that he could do no more Amba went away, resolved to devote herself to austerities, that she might herself slay Bhīshma. Rāma with the ascetics departed for the Mahendra mountain; Bhishma enter d Hästinapura, and was blessed by Satyavatī, and he appointed spies to ascertain the doings of Amba. Bhishma became afflicted when he heard that she was resolved on ascetic austerities (description), but was consoled by Narada and Vyasa. After having lived for six months on air she stood a year in the waters of Yamuna, etc., and thus went on for twelve years. She then went into Vatsabhūmi (resorted to by Si. and Ca.), etc. (a). Ganga, angry because she observed these vows for the destruction of Bhīshma, cursed her, saying that after death she would become a river crooked in her course, etc. When Amba once more came back to Vatsabhumi she there became the above-mentioned river, but in consequence of her ascetic merit, only with half her body, while as to the other half she remained a maiden as before (V, 186). To the ascetics in Vatsabhūmi she said that she was resolved to obtain manhood in order to be revenged on Bhishma. Civa appeared in his own form in the midst of those great rshis, and premised her that she would slav Bhishma and even obtain manhood, and in a new body remember all the incidents; born in the race of Drupada, she would become a maharatha. Then Civa disappeared. Amba burnt herself on the bank of the Yamuna in the very eight of those great Rshis (V. 187). Questioned by Duryodhana how Cikhandin, having before been born a girl, afterwards became a man. Phishma related: The eldest queen of king Drupada was childless. During those years Drupada worshipped Cankara for the sake of offspring, resolving to bring about Bhishma's destruction, and practising the austerest of penances. He begged Civa for a son; Civa raid he should have a child who would be both female and male. In due time the queen conceived (as told by Narada), and gave birth to a daughter, whom Drupada gave out for a son, and called her Cikhandin. Bhishma alone. from his spies and from Narada, knew the truth (V. 188). In arrows and weapons she became a disciple of Drona. They afterwards wedded her to the daughter of the Dacurna king Hiranyavarman, quite assured that the words of Civa would become true. Cikhandin, after marriage, came buck to Kümpilya. At the discovery of Çikhandin's sex a war was about to break out with Hiranyavarman (V, 189). Drupada was not naturally courageous, and became filled with fear, and, in the presence of others, asked his queen about the truth (though he knew everything) (V, 190). The queen said that, childless as she was, when her daughter Cikhandini was born she had, from fear of her co-wives, told Drupada that it was a son, remembering the words of Civa. Drupada prepared for war, and, with the queen, prayed to the gods. Cikhandini went to a forest, the haunt of the powerful Yaksha (Guhyaka, v. 7480) Sthunakarna, who was a follower of Kubera, resolved on putting an end to her own life. Repeatedly requested by Sthunakarna to ask a boon, she told him the matter, and wished to become a man. as long as Hiranyavarman had not left the city (V. 191). He gave her his manhood and took her womanhood for a certain period, i.e. till Hiranyavarman should have departed. Cikhandin went home and informed Drupada, who with his wife recollected the words of Civa. Hiranyavarman sent a brahman as an envoy to Kāmpilya, threatening to exterminate Drupada with his counsellors, sons, etc. Drupada sent a brahman as his envoy to Hiranyavarman, maintaining that Cikhandin was a male; "let it be made clear by means of witnesses; somebody has spoken falsely to thee." Hiranyavarman despatched a number of young ladies for ascertaining it, and they attested that he was a male. Hiranyavarman then passed some days with Drupada in gladness, gave much wealth to Cikhandin, and then departed, having rebuked his daughter. Kubera, hearing the matter from the Yukshas, cursed Sthunakarna, saying that his femininity should remain as it was; as the Yakshas began to soften him, he set a limit to the curse, i.e. Cikhandin's death. When Cikhandin came to redeem his pledge, Sthunakarna related his curse and let him go. Drupada gave Cikhandin as a pupil to Drona, who taught him the fourfold (catushpadam) Dhanurveda, along with the Dhartarashtras and Dhrshtadyumna. It was Ambā who had been born as Çikhandin. Bhīshma had made a vow not to shoot weapons against a woman, or one that had before been a woman, or one bearing a feminine name, or one whose form resembled that of a woman (V, 192). Duryodhana asked in what time Bhīma, etc. (a), could annihilate the hostile army. Bhīshma said he could do it in a month; Drona said the same; Krpa mentioned two months; Acvatthaman, ten nights; Karna, ave nights. Bhishma ridiculed Karpa, saying that he will think otherwise when he had encountered Arjuna and Krahna (V. 193). Having learnt this from his spies, Yudhishthira asked Arjuna the same question. Arjuna said that with Krshnu as his ally he could exterminate the three worlds with the gods, etc., in the twinkling of an eye; the weapon given him by Pacupati (i.e. Civa) as a hunter (Kairate dvandvayuddhs), which Pacupati used at the end of the yuga for destroying created things, was not known to Bhishma, etc. ( $\beta$ ); he enumerated Yudhishthira's allies ( $\gamma$ ); Yudhishthira was himself competent to exterminate the three worlds (V, 194). Next morning, under a cloudless sky, the Kaurava army marched (description) to the field, first Vinda, etc. (8); Acvathuman, etc. (c), in the second division; in the rear, Krtavarman, etc. (ζ), with the Dhartarashtras at their head. Durrodhana's oncampment (description) looked like a second Hästinapura (V, 195). In the same way Yudhishthira also ordered out his troops, headed by Dhrehtadyumna, under Dhrahtaketu, etc. (7), (description); first Abhimanyu, etc. (0); then Bhima and Arjuna in the second division; last of all himself with Virāţa and Drupada, etc. Then he disposed his divisions in a different order, confounding the Dhārtarāshṭras: the Draupadeyas, etc. ( $\iota$ ), under Bhīmasena; in the middle division, Virāţa, etc. ( $\iota$ ); in that part where Yudhishṭhira himself was, Cekitāna, etc. ( $\lambda$ ). Yudhishṭhira was followed by Saucitti, etc. ( $\mu$ ), (V, 196).

[Amrtamanthana] ("churning of the Amrta or Ambrosia"). Cf. Astikaparvan. § 28: Once the gods having assembled on the summit of Mount Meru, Nārāyaņa told Brahmán to churn the Ocean with the gods and the Asuras, in order to obtain Amrta (I. 17). Vishņu and Brahmán prevailed upon Ananta (i.e. Çesha), the prince of Snakes, to bring up the mountain Mandara. The gods having obtained from the Ocean the permission to churn it, Indra placed Mandara on the back of the Tortoise-king; Mandara was made the churning staff and Vāsuki the cord, the Asuras holding him by the hood and the gods by the tail, while Ananta, who sided with Nārāyaṇa, at intervals raised the snake's hood and suddenly lowered it. Black vapours with flames issued from Vāsuki's mouth; etc. After some churning

the gums of various trees and herbs mingled with the waters of the Ocean, and the milky water produced clarified butter, but even then the Amrta did not appear. The gods were tired and repaired to Brahman, who prevailed upon Narayana to grant the gods new strength to churn afresh. After a while the Moon, Ori, Suradevi (wine), Ucchaihgravas, and Kaustubha came forth on the side of the gods: then Dhanvantari with a white vessel of Amrta in his hand; then Airavana, and at last the poison Kālakūţa, that Çiva, solicited by Brahman, swallowed for the safety of the creation; from that time Civa is called Nīlakantha ('Blue-neck'). The Asuras preparing to rob the gods of Cri and the Amrta, Narayana, assisted by his māyā ('illusion'), assumed a ravishing female form; the Danavas and Daityas were infatuated, and placed the Amrta in her hands (I, 18). While the Daityas and Danavas pursued the gods, Vishnu with Nara let the gods drink of the Amrta; the Danava Rahu also drank of it in the disguise of a god, but was discovered by Surya (i.e. the Sun) and Soma (i.e. the Moon); then Nārāyana instantly seized his discus and cut off his head, which to this day swallows Sürya and Soma. In a dreadful battle on the shores of the saltwater sea the gods, headed by Nārāyana with his discus Sudarçana and Nara with his celestial bow, discomfited the Asuras, who entered the bowels of the earth or plunged into the sea of salt waters. The gods replaced Mandara on its own base, and, headed by Indra, they entrusted the keeping of the vessel of Amrta to Kirīţin (i.e. Nara), (I, 19).

Angirasa(m) ("on the descendants of Angiras"). § 488 (Märk.): Asked by Yudhishthira, Markandoya related the following "old story" (itihdaam puratanam): Angiras (the third son of Brahmán, v. 14122) in days of yore practised austerities in his hermitage, so that he excelled Agni, who, thinking that Brahmán had created a new Fire, was greatly depressed, but Angiras, saying that Agni had been created by Brahmán to officiate as fire, asked him to occupy his proper place, and when Agni only wished to be the second or Prajagatyaka fire, at last prevailed upon him to remain and make him (i.e. Angiras) his first son. Angiras also had a son, Brhaspati; knowing him the Angirasa to be the firstborn son of Fire, the gods came and learned the matter from Angiras (III, 217).—§ 489: The children of Angiras and Cubha (B. Subha): the son Brhaspati, and the eight daughters, Bhānumatī, Rāgā, Sinībālī, also called Kapardisutā, because she was both visible and invisible, Arcishmatī, Havishmatī, Mahāmatī, and Kuhū (III, 218).—§ 490:

§ 491: With Kūçyapa, Vāsishtha, Prāņa, son of Prāņa, Agni Angirasa, and Cyavana Trisuvarcaka, he, after a penance lasting for many years, obtained the son Pañoajanya ("appertaining to five men and the progenitor of five tribes," v. 14160). Pancajanya (= Tapas, v. 14166-8, 14173, 14174), after 10,000 years of penances, produced the fire of the Pitrs; from his head he created Brhat and Rathantara, from his mouth Vata and Rasahara, I in his navel Civa, from his might (balad) Indra, from his soul (pranato) Vayu and Agni. from his arms Anudattau, ** and Viçvo †† (!) and the elements (bhūtāni), and then the five sons of the Pitrs. Brhadratha's son was Pranidhi, Kūçyapa's Mahattara, Angiras' Bhanu, Varca's Saubhara, and Prana's Anudatta, in all twenty-five. - § 492: He also produced three times five devah: Yajñamushah ("who steal the sacrifices"), Subhima, Atibhima, Bhima, Bhimabala, Abala, Sumitra, Mitravat, Mitrajña,

• We are not told in the text whose son Niccyavana is. He might be the second son of Brhaspati, and that is apparently the opinion of Nil. and PCR.
† It is not said in the text whose son he is. PCR. takes Nishkyti to be another name of Satya.

† PCR. supposes Viçvajit to be Brhaspati's third son, Viçvabhıj the fourth, Vadavägni the fifth, Ürdhvabhāj the same as Vadavägni, Svishfakrt the sixth son of Brhaspati, Manyu (fury) as predicate to Manyanti, "daughter of Prajāpati," Svāhā the same as Manyanti; Kāna, Amagha, and Üktha the sons of Svāhā, by sattva, rajas, and tamas respectively; Mahāvās to mean "the great word, i.e. the word of God," and Samāçvāsa ("the means of rest") as epithet of Uktha.

Mitravardhana, Mitradharman, Surapravira, Vira, Suveça, Suravareae, and " Suranam api hantr."- § 493: Brhaduktha and Rathantara (cf. § 491) or Mitravinda, sons of Tapas (III, 220). Many "fires" enumerated, among others the Ave Urjaskarāh (Purandara, Ushman, Manu, Çambhu, and Avasathya), sons of Tapas; the six sons of Bhans with his wives Suprajā and Brhadbhasā Sūryajā (Balada, Manyumat, Vishnu - Dhrtimat - Angiras, Agrayana, Agraha, Stubha). Nica was likewise the wife of Bhanu, and gave birth to one daughter, to Agni and Soma, and to five Fires (Pavakan). The Fire (Pavaka) who in company with Parianya is honoured with the first havis at the Caturmasvas is Agni Vaicvanara. He who is called the lord of all the world is Viccopati, the second son of Manu, etc. (III, 221). Genealogy of the Fires continued. The Fire Saha, from fear of his grandson the Fire Bharata (Bhara, Niyata), who burns the dead bodies, hid himself in the sea, † asking Atharran to carry the oblations to the gods. When his place of concealment had been divulged by the fishes, Saha cursed them, saying that they should become the food of all creatures in various ways. Then Saha gave up his body and entered the earth, where he created various metals: from his pus (puyut) force (tojak) and scent, from his bones the devaduru, from his phlogm glass (aphātikam). from his bile marakata, from his liver the black iron, the clouds from his nails, the corals from his veins, etc., and remained absorbed in meditation, whence he was roused by the tapas of Bhrgu, Angiras, etc. Seeing the rehi (i.e. Atharvangirasa, Nil. = Atharvan, PCR.), he again took refuge in the water. The whole world with the gods sought the protection of Atharvan, who searched the sea, and finding the Fire, created the worlds (so Nil. and PCR.). So Agni was formerly destroyed by Atharvan, and called back (ahatah (?), PCR.) he carries the oblations, and travelling about various countries and living there (i.e. in the sea, PCR.), he produced the various fires mentioned in the Vedan. - § 494: Enumeration of rivers that are said to be the mothers of the fires. The wife of Adbhuta was Priya, and his son Vibhurasi (14234). There are as many somas (i.e. kinds of soma sacrifices, Nil. and PCR.) as the number of fires mentioned. Also in the race of Atri [these] mind-born sons of Brahmán (?) † sprang forth. Atri, wishing to procreate sons, conceived these [fires] in his mind, and the fires came out of his, the brahman's, body. powers of these fires are the same as those of the Adbhuta fire as related in the Vedas, for they are all one and the same, the first Angiras, sprung from [his] body in various forms like the jyotishtoma sacrifice (III, 222).

Suspicion had fallen upon him, because thieves had hid their plunder in his hermitage, while he was sitting for years with his arms upraised observing the vow of silence. When impaled, he by his ascetic power not only preserved his life, but summoned other rehis to the scene, who came in the night in the shape of birds (I, 107). *Anucara, pl. ("companions"). § 615u (Skanda): IX, 457, 2517 (Airāvataḥ sūnucaraḥ), 2519 (Yamasya), 2537 (8: Amça gave five anucarān to Skanda: Paragha, Vaṭa, Bhīma, Dahati, and Dahana), 2539 (e: Vishṇu gave three anucarān to Skanda: Cakra, Vikramaka, and Saṃkrama), 2617 (the companions of Skanda); 48, 2619 (Mātr-gaṇān Kumārānucarān). — IX, 45, 2527 (caturtham asyānucaraṃ khyātaṃ Kumudamālinaṃ | tataḥ Sthāṇur mahātojā mahāpārishadaṃ prabhuḥ). — § IX, 46, 2532 (tataḥ pradād anucarau Yamaḥ Kālopamāv ubhau), 2534 (Somo 'py anucarau çārau parasainyapratāpinau), 2535, 2542, 2550.

Anuçasana ("instruction"). § 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 599, 603 (i.e. Ānuçasanikaparvan).

Anuçasanika ("relating to instruction"). § 10 (Parvas.):

I. 2. 353 (°am parva, i.e. Anuçasanikaparvan).

[Anuçasanikaparvan] ("the section relating to instruction," the 91st of the minor parvans of Mahābhārata; cf. Anuçasanika). § 719: Yudhishfhira's despondency at the alaughter of his kinsmen on the field of Kurukshstra; he enquired how he might be cleansed of his sins; Bhishma comforted him by telling him that the soul is not the cause of our acts, citing the ancient story Gautami-lubdhakavyāla-Mṛṭyu-kāla-samvāda (b), "This evil has neither been of thy own creation, nor of Duryedhams's, but of Kala's." Yudhishthira became consoled (XIII, 1).—$ 720:

Asked by Yudhishthera if any householder had ever succeeded in conquering Mrtys by virtue, Bhishma recited the ancient story Sudarçan opākhyāna (b), "To a householder there is no higher divinity than the guest; the blessings of an honoured guest are more efficacious than the merit of 100 sacrifices. Whenever a deserving guest seeks the hospitality of an householder and is not honoured by him, he takes away [with him] all the virtues of the latter, giving him his sins [in return]." Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 2).- § 721: Yudhishthira asked how the Kshattriya Viceamitra became a brahman, mentioning his destroying of the 100 sons of Vasishtha, etc. (a), and comparing the instance of Matanga, who was born as a Candala and could not attain to brahmanhood (XII, 3). Bhishma related how in olden times Viçvamitra attained to the position of a brahman and B.-r. i.e. Vicvāmitropākhyāna (b), (XIII, 4).—§ 722: Yudhishthira wished to know the merits of compassion and the characteristics of devout men. Bhishma recited the ancient story of the discourse between Indra and the parrot (in the territories of the Kaçi king) who did not desert the blasted tree whorein it had been born, though the tree had withered, being pierced by a fowler with a poisoned arrow. The parrot, by his penances, knew Indra (who came in the shape of a brahman), and, being granted a boon, made Indra revive the tree: and after death he came to the region of Indra (XIII, 5).-§ 723: Yudhishthira enquired which of the two, Exertion and Destiny, is more powerful. Bhishma related the ancient story of the conversation of Vasishtha and Brahman, in which Brahman showed the necessity of exertion, notwithstanding the force of destiny, under reference to the example of the gods, etc. (a); Janamejaya, who followed in the footsteps of Indra, was checked and put down by the gods on account of his having killed a brahman woman; the viprarehi Vaicampayana was put down by the gods for killing a brahman by ignorance and a child (XIII, 6).—§ 724: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma related the various fruits of various good acts. The Kuru princes became filled with wonder at his doctrine, as narrated by R. of old (XIII, 7). Yudhishthira enquired who should be honoured and who liked, etc.; Bhishma's answer about the duty of honouring good brahmans (XIII, 8).—§ 725: Yudhishthira's enquiry about the misery that awaits those who refuse to make gifts to brahmans after having promised to give them. Bhishma set forth the various kinds of misery that await such men, citing the old narrative of the discourse between a jackal and an ape: While both were human beings they were intimate friends; after death one of them became a jackal and the other an apc, the former because he had not given to a brahman what he had promised to give, the latter because he used to appropriate the fruits belonging to brahmans. Bhishma had heard this from his preceptor and from Krehne (XIII, 9). - § 726: Yudhishthira wished to know whether any fault is incurred by one who gives instruction to a person belonging to a low caste. Bhishma recited what he had heard certain R. say in days of yore: instruction should not be imparted to one that belongs to a low or mean caste. He related the following instance that occurred in days of old: There was a sacred hermitage on the Himavat, inhabited by Si., Ca., Valakhilyas, etc. (description). A Cudra asked the head of the college (kulspsti) to initiate him into a life of renunciation, but he was refused. He then, at some distance. made a hut, etc., for himself, and began to live according to rigid vows, made sacrifices to the gods, etc. (description).

A.R. used to come to him, and, at his request, promised to assist him in Pity-yajña. As the Cudra placed the [stool called | bret towards the south with its head turned towards the west, R. told him to place the brew with its head turned towards the east, and to sit with his face turned towards the north, and gave him all directions about the craddha as laid down in the ordinances, and after the rites had been accomplished R. returned to his own abode. After a long time the Cudra ascetic mot with his death in those woods, and in his next life took birth in the family of a great king; the R. in his next life took birth in the family of a priest, and became well versed in the Atharvaveda, etc. (a); the reborn Cudra was installed king after his father's death. He appointed the reborn R. as his priest, and ruled his kingdom righteously; but every day, when he saw his priest, he smiled or laughed. The priest made him swear to tell him the truth, and he was then informed by him about their former births, where the penances of R. had all been frustrated by the instruction he had given to the Cadra. In order that he might not obtain a still lower birth in his next life, he caused him to relinquish his present office as priest, make gifts, and observe vows, repairing to many sacred places, and at last, his soul having become purified, living in that very asylum where he had lived in his former birth, practising very severe penances; thus he succeeded in attaining to the highest success (XIII, 10). — § 727: Yudhishthira enquired after the nature of the man or the woman in whom the goddess of Prosperity always dwells. Bhishma related the conversation between Rukmini (the mother of Pradyumna with the Makara banner) and the goddess Cri, whom she once asked this question in the presence of Devaki's son (XIII, 11) .- § 728: Yudhishthira enquired which of the two, man or woman, derives the greater pleasure from sexual union. Bhishma told the old story of the discourse between Bhangasvana and Cakra, i.e. Bhangasvanopakhyana (b), (XIII, 12). — § 729: Yudhishthira asked how one should act in order to live happily both here and hereafter; Bhishma's answer indicating the chief duties of commission and omission (XIII, 13).—§ 730: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discoursed about the different names of Mahadera and his puissance, but soon caused Krehna to take up the topic before the conclave of R. with Vyasa, just as R. Tandin, the offspring of Brahman, had in days of yore told the 1,000 names of Mahadeva before Brahmán in Brahmaloka. "After twelve years had expired from the time when Pradyumna (the son of Rukmini) slew the Asura Cambara in days of yore, my spouse Jambarati (seeing the sons of Rukmini-Pradyumua, Carudeshas, etc.) asked me to grant her a heroic son, saying: By worshipping Mahadeva for twelve years and emaciating thyself in observing vows, thou hast begotten the sons Carudeshna, etc., with Rukmini (a).' She prayed that Brahman, otc. (3), would protect me; I took leave of Ahuka, etc. (7), and Garuda bore me to Himavat, where I dismissed him; I there saw the asylum (description) of Upamanyu Vaiyaghrapadya, reverenced by D., G., and K., adorned with Ganga, etc. Upamanyu directed me to devote myself to penances and gratify Civa, here where D. and R. had in days of yore gratified him, who took his birth as Da. Hiranyakacipu (b), who was the father of Mandara (c), irresistible even to Vishau's discus Sudarçana (d); Çiva had further granted boons to the Danavas (or Asuras) Vidyutprabha (e), Çalamukha (f), and to Brahman, etc. ( $\delta$ ); the sacrifice Septakapala, etc. ( $\zeta$ ).

Having narrated his former relations to Mahadeva, Upamanyu (g) there pointed out to me Si., R., V.-D., Y., G., Aps., etc., and said that in the sixth month from that time I should behold Mahadeva and obtain twenty-four boons from him and Uma. He gave me certain mantres, by reciting which I was sure to behold Cankara. On the eighth day I underwent the diksha, etc. (description); for one month I lived on fruits, etc.; then I beheld Mahadeva (description) and Uma in a cloud (description), surrounded by 1,100 Rudras, etc., praised by A., V., V.-D., A., Indra, etc. (w), uttered the Rathantara Saman in the presence of Bhaca (Civa). Innumerable masters of Yoga, etc. (aa), were bowing down to him; Sanatkumara, etc. (BB), were beheld by me standing there in their bodily forms; Lp., etc. (77), were seen to bow down to Civa; G. and Aps. sang and hymned him; V.-D., etc.  $(\delta \delta)$ , were adoring him in thought, word, and deed; Brahmán, Çakra, etc., looked at me; I, however, had not the power to look at Mahadeva. I saluted Mahadeva: 'Thou art,' etc. (ee). Civa roared like a lion; the innumerable brahmans there present, etc. (ζζ), bowed down to Civa. Civa, looking at Uma, Indra, and myself, told me to ask for eight boons" (XIII, 14). Krehna went on to enumerate the eight boons, including hundreds upon hundreds of children and (granted by Uma in the name of Civa) a son Camba. "Uma also granted me eight boons" (including 100 sons), "and said that I should have 16,000 wives, etc.; and that 7,000 guests would daily feed at my palace. Then Civa and Uma disappeared with their ganas. All this I related to Upamanyu" (XIII, 15). Upamanyu said: There was in the Krta age a R. Tandi who devoutly adored the god [Civa] for 10,000 years. He succeeded in beholding Mahadeva and praised him  $(\eta \eta)$ , and further said: Neither Brahmán, etc. (00), know thee. Civa said that Tandi should be imperishable and eternal, etc., and his son become the author of Sutras, etc., and granted him a boon. Tandi said: Let my devotion to thee be steady. Then the god disappeared. Then Tandi came to my (i.e. Upamanyu's) asylum and fold me all that had happened to him. Dost thou hear all those celebrated names [of Mahādova] that Tandi said unto me. Brahman had at one time enumerated 10,000 names of Mahadeva; in the scriptures 1,000 names of him occur. They are not known to all, but were uttered in days of yore by Brahmán for the purpose of adoring Civa. Having acquired them by the favour of Brahman, Tandi communicated them to me (XIII, 16). Krehna said: "B.-r. Upamanyu said: I shall adore [Civa] with names uttered by Brahman, R., in the Vedas and Vedāngas, applied by Tandi, etc. [i.e. Mahādeva-sahasranāma-stotra]." Blessing upon the reader; "Dā., Y., Ra., Pc., Yatudhanas, and Gh. can do no injury to him" (XIII, 17). Vydes told Yudhishthirs to gratify Çivs with this hymn consisting of 1,008 names; Vyāsa had himself recited it in former days, when engaged in penances on Meru in order to obtain a son, and he had obtained the fulfilment of all his wishes. After this Kapila, etc. (u), obtained boons from Civa. Then [Rama] Jamadagnya, etc. (KK), narrated to Yudhishthira the boons they had been granted by Civa. Vaicampayana continued: Hearing these marvellous feats of Mahadeva related by the ascetics, Yudhishthira became amazed. Then Krshna said to Yudhishthira: Upamanyu said to me: Unrighteous men, stained by Rajas and Tamas, do not succeed in attaining to Içans (Civa); even if a person lives in the enjoyment of every pleasure and luxury, yet he comes to be regarded as the equal of pure-minded forest recluses if he is devoted to the Supreme Deity; if Rudra is pleased with a person, he can confer upon him the position of either Brahman or Keçava or Cakra with all the deities under him, or the sovereignty of the three worlds; a person who devastates the whole universe does not become stained with sin if he adores and worships Civa . . . Then Krahna said to Yudhishthira: Aditya, etc. (AA), have sprung from that creator of all creatures (Civa); indeed, that subtle Brahmán is the cause of life. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 18). [§ 730, i.e. XIII, 14-18, is called Meghavahanopakhyana.]- § 731: Yudhishthira enquired after the purport of the scriptural injunction to husband and wife about the joint performance of all duties. Bhishma related the old narrative of the discourse between Ashtavakra and Diça, i.e. Ashtavakra-Dik-samvāda (b), (XIII, 19-21). - § 732: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discoursed on the question who is worthy of receiving gifts, etc., quoting R. Markandeya, etc. (a), (XIII, 22). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the ordinances regulating the actions to be perpetrated towards the deities and the Pitrs on the occasions of craddhas: "One should carefully perform all acts relating to the deities in the forenoon, and all acts relating to the Pitrs in the afternoon; that gift that is made untimely, etc., is appropriated by Rā."; the brahmans that must not be invited to craddhas, and those that should be invited, etc.; Jūtakarman, etc. (XIII. 23). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the circumstances under which a person may become guilty of brahmanicide without actually slaying a brahman (XIII, 24).- § 733: Asked by Yudhishthira about the holy places on earth, Bhishma repeated the enumeration of them (a) made by Angiras to Gautama, who put this same question, especially mentioning the result of bathing in Candrabhaga, etc. (b), in Puehkara, etc. (o), in Hiranyabindu, etc. (d), in Indratoya, etc. (e), in Gangadvara, etc. (f), at Saptaganga, etc. (g), at Kanyakupa, etc. (h), in Devika, etc. (i), Mahagangā, etc. (j), Vaimānika, etc. (k), in Çarastamba, etc. (l), Citrakuja, etc. (m), Malangavapī, etc. (n), Ganguhrada, etc. (o), Ganga - Yamunayos tirtham, etc. (p), Marudyana, etc. (q), Utpātaka, etc. (r), Açmaprehiha, etc. (s), Viçala, etc. (i), Punarāvartanandā, etc. (u), Rāmahrada, etc. (v), Narmadā, etc. (w), Cāṇḍālikāçrama (B. Āñjalio), etc. (x), Ujjānaka, etc. (y), Kālodaka, etc. (s). For the purpose of repairing to all the tirthus in the world, one should mentally think of those amongst them that are wholly or almost inaccessible. Angiras had obtained this discourse from Kacyapa. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 25) .--§ 784: Vaicampayana said: Though equal unto Brhaepati in intelligence, Brahmán in forgiveness, Indra in prowess, and Sarya in energy, Bhishma (the son of Ganga) had been overthrown in battle by Arjuna. Accompanied by his brothers, etc., Yudhishthira asked him these questions. He was lying on a bed of arrows in expectation of the time of death. Many M.-r. had come there to see him: Airi, etc. (a). Yudhishthira with his brothers duly worshipped those R., who then sat down and conversed about Bhishma (who became delighted), and then, taking leave of Bhishms and the Pandavas, made themselves invisible. The Pandavas then waited upon Bhishma, and seeing the quarters of the sky blazing forth with splendour on account of the penances of the Rekis, they became filled with wonder, and talked it over with Bhishma. Vaicampayana continued: After that conversation was over, Yudhishthira touched Bhishma's feet with his head, and then resumed his questions relating to morality and righteousness. Yudhishthira asked which countries, retreats, mountains, and rivers are foremost in point of sanctity. Bhishms related the old narrative of a conversation between a brahman who was a ciloñcha-ertti (subsisting upon gleanings) (or cilarriti) householder and a siddhs (crowned with ascetic success) R., who roamed over the earth and once had passed the night in the house of the cilarriti, who, when they had conversed on subjects connected with the Vedas and Upanishads, asked him this very question, and was instructed by him about the superior sanctity of Ganga. Then the siddha ascended the firmament, and the cilariti sought the protection of Ganga and attained to great success. Yudhishthira, etc., were filled with delight. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 26).- § 735: Yudhishthira asked how a Kshattriya, Vaiçya, or Çudra may acquire the position of a brahman. Bhishma said that the brahmanhood cannot be acquired except by birth, relating an old story of a conversation between Matanga and a sheass. etc., i.e. Indra-Matanga-samvāda (b), (XIII, 27-29).— § 736: Yudhishthira mentioned that in former times the position of a brahman was acquired by Viçvāmitra, and asked how king Vitahavya in ancient times succeeded in obtaining brahmanhood. Bhishma told the Vitahavyopākhyāna (b), (XIII, 30).- § 737: Asked by Yudhishthira as to who are worthy of reverent homage, Bhishma repeated the old narrative of the discourse between Narada and Vasudeva, who asked him the above question. Narada answered: "I worship them who constantly worship Varuna, etc." (a), (XIII, 31).-§ 738: Asked by Yudhishthira about the merits of those persons who grant protection to living creatures, Bhishma told the Qyenakapotākhyāna (b), (XIII. 32) .- § 739: Asked by Yudhishthirs which act is the most important of all those that have been laid down for a king, Bhishma said it was the worship of brahmans; they are older than P., D., men, U., and Ra., and incapable of being vanquished by D., P., G., Ra., As., or Pc.; it is owing to the absence of brahmans that the Kehattriya tribes, the Cakas, etc. (a), have become degraded into the state of Cadras; the great R. have said that brahmanicide is a heinous sin (XIII, 33); they have Soma for their king; "this was said to me by Narada"; Aditya, etc. (3), enter the body of the brahman and take what the brahman cats; in the house where brahmans do not eat, P. refuse to eat: examples of brahmans (7) who have conquered Kshattriyas; "in this connection the old story of the conversation between Vasudeva and the Earth," who instructed the former, is told; examples of discomfiture arising from acts hurtful to the brahmans (δ), (XIII, 34). Bhishma's characterisation of brahmans; the Mekalas, etc. (a), and numerous other kshattriya tribes have become degraded to the state of Cudras through the wrath of the brahmans; having disregarded the brahmans, As. have been obliged to take refuge in the depths of the ocean; through the favour of the brahmans D. have become denizens of heaven; comparisons with brahmans (5): the brahmans are incapable of being subjugated (XIII, 35).—§ 740: Bhishma told the old history of the discourse between Cakra (in the guise of an asceticdescription—on an ugly car) and As. Cambara, who ascribed his success to his never cherishing any ill-feeling towards the breamene, referring to the encounter between D. and As. in days of old; Cambara's father had obtained instruction from

Candramae (Soma, the Moon) as to how the brahmane attain to success. Cakra began to worship the brahmans, and therefore succeeded in obtaining the supremacy of the gods (XIII, 36).- § 741: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the comparative eligibility of brahmans for receiving presents; "one pays off the debt one owes to the gods by performing sacrifices, to P. by procreating children, to the brahmans by making presents unto them, and to the guests by feeding them" (XIII, 37).—§ 742: Asked by Yudhishthira about the disposition of women (who are said to be the root of all evil and exceedingly frail), Bhishma told the old story of the discourse between D.-r. Narada and the courtezan Aps. Pañcacada, in ancient times. in the region of Brahmán (Brāhmīm, so PCR.), (XIII, 38). Yudhishthira observed that women are in possession of the illusive power of As. Cambara, etc. (a), and the political knowledge of Cukra and Brhaspati; "it seems to me that Brhaspati and other great thinkers evolved the science of politics from observation of the understanding of women" (XIII, 39).- § 743: Bhishma approved of what Yudhishthira had said: "There is no creature more sinful than woman; she is the illusion that Dai. Maya created, etc.; I am told that all persons of the human race in course of natural progress attain to the state of gods; this circumstance alarmed the gods; they repaired to Brahmán, who created women by an Atharvan rite; in a previous creation women were all virtuous; but those that sprang from this creation by Brahmán with the aid of an illusion became sinful; Brahmán bestowed the desire of enjoying all kinds of carnal pleasures upon them." Bhishma repeated the old story of how, in days of yore, Vipula had succeeded in restraining his preceptor's spouse, i.e. Vipulopākhyāna (b), (XIII, 40-43).- § 744: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma explained upon what person one should bestow one's daughter in marriage; the different forms of marriage (a); various ordinances about marriage, quoting Prajapati and Manu and the Marute and the Rehie; what constitutes or completes the union of marriage; the passing and acceptance of a dower do not constitute marriage. Bhishma referred to the opinion of Bahlika and his own conduct in liberating Amba, whom he had abducted for his brother Vicitravirya, having defeated the Magadhas, etc. ( $\beta$ ), quoting prince Satyavat (XIII, 44). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhīshma expounded how a girl's kinsmen should act after having received a dower if the giver goes away without marrying and does not return for some time, comparing the instance of Savitri and quoting Sukratu (the grandson of the Videha king Janaka); the unrighteous dereliction of eternal usage is regarded as the practice of the Asuras. Asked by Yudhishihira upon what authority the wealth of men is inherited by others when they happen to have daughters, Bhishma explained the different rules of succession, and recited some verses sung in days of yore by Yama about the man who sells his son or bestows his daughter for a dower (he has to sink into seven terrible hells named Kala); the Arsha marriage is also a sale; "even a human being with whom one has no relationship of blood should not form the subject of sale" (XIII, 45); a verse of [Daksha] Pracetasa; how women should be treated; "those houses that are cursed by women meet with destruction and ruin as if scorched by some Atharvan rite"; Manu, on the eve of his departure for heaven, entrusted women to the care and protection of men; a verse sung by a princess of the house of the Videha king Janaka on the duties of women (XIII. 46). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the comparative eligibility of different kinds of sons to the father's inheritance, quoting Manu and R., and M.-r. Kaçyapa (B. Kao) Martos; "if a brahman, led by lust. acts in a different way, he shall come to be regarded as a Candala among brahmans" (XIII, 47). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the duties of persons born in the mixed castes; in the beginning Prajapati created the four castes for the sake of sacrifice; the son begetten by a brahman upon a Cudra wife is called Paracava (etymology); a Kshattriya's son with a Cadra wife is called an Ugra, etc. (7); only the duties of the four principal castes have been laid down in the scriptures; as regards the others. the scriptures are entirely silent. Asked by Yudhishthira. Bhishma discussed the signs by which the origin of men of impure birth may be known (XIII, 48). Asked by Yudhish!hira, Bhishma discussed the different kinds of sons: Niruktaja, etc. (δ), (XIII, 49).—§ 745: Asked by Yudhishihira about compassion, etc., Bhishma told the ancient story of a conversation between Nahusha and M.-r. Cyavana, i.e. Cyavanopákhyana (b), including Cyavana-Kuçika-samvāda (XIII, 50-56). — § 746: Yudhishthira became stupefied with grief at the thought of the millions of men he had slaughtered; he feared that the Pandavas would have to sink in hell, their heads hanging downwards, and desired to practise severe penances. Bhīshma expounded the different rewards of different kinds of acts. Yudhishthira desired to attain the end that is reserved to heroes, and no longer expressed any disgust at leading a householder's mode of life, and all the Pandavas with Draupadi approved of his words (XIII, 57). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma spoke of the rewards attached to the planting of trees and the digging of wells and tanks; D., men, G., P., U., and Ra., etc., all resort to a tank full of water as their refuge; the same and R. all have recourse to trees (XIII, 58). Asked by Yudhishthira. Bhishma discussed what gift is distinguished before all other gifts (XIII, 59). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed which gift is more meritorious, that bestowed on one who asks for it or that given to an unsoliciting person (XIII, 60). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma explained where one meets with the rewards attached to gifts and sacrifices, adducing the instances of king Cibi and Manu (XIII, 61). Asked by Yudhishthira what is the best of all gifts, Bhishma declared it to be earth (called, therefore, Priyadatta); Mrtyu, etc. (a), are incapable of touching the person that makes a gift of earth; the verse hearing which [Rama] Jamadagnya gave away the whole earth to Kaçyapa is quoted; a gift of earth is a high expiation for the sin of those who betake themselves to Atharvan rites in order to do injuries to others;  $\hat{A}$ ., etc. ( $\beta$ ), applaud the man who makes a gift of earth; he further told the old narrative of a discourse between Brhaspati and Indra: having adored Vishou in 100 sacrifices, Indra put this same question to Brhaspati, and was instructed by him; "that man who does not keep a promise of a gift of earth, or who recalls it, is tied with the noose of Varuna at the command of Death; those men have never to go to Yama who honour and worship brahmans, etc."; that king who makes gifts of earth sports in bliss in heaven, adored by D. and G., and is approached by 100 Aps., etc. Indra gave the whole earth to Brhaspati; if these verses are recited at a craddha neither Ra. nor As. can succeed in appropriating any share of the offerings made (XIII, 62). Asked by Yudhish-thirs as to what gifts kings should make, what gifts immediately gratify the brahmans, what fruits attach to them, what gifts are productive of rewards both here and hereafter, Bhishma related the answer he had received from Narada when he put the same question to him: a gift of food made to even a Candala or a dog is never lost: in a former Kalpa (pura kalpe) Prajapati said that food is ample, etc.: Agni and Some in the body create and maintain the vital seed; thus the sun and wind (Pavanah) and the vital seed spring and act from food; description of the regions of heaven reserved to those that make gifts of food (XIII, 63). Yudhishthira enquired after the conjunctions of the planets and stars in relation to gifts. Bhishma repeated the ancient narrative of the discourse between Devaki and R. Narada at Drūrakā, where Narada answered this very question. Devak? in her turn told it to her daughters-in-law (XIII, 64). Various merits of various kinds of gifts, Bhishma referring to Atri, etc. (7); ghee is said to gratify Brhaspati, etc. (8), (XIII, 65). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma commented on the gift of sandals and shoes, and of sesame, and land, and kine. and food; sesume seeds were created by Brahmán as the best food of the Pitrs, etc.; Apastamba, etc. (e), have all ascended to heaven by means of making gifts of sesame seeds. Once the gods, desirous of performing a sacrifice on the earth, repaired to Brahman on the Himavat and obtained from him a clod of earth (which the munis should always adorc); there came Agastya, etc.  $(\zeta)$ ; the gods attached one-sixth of the morit arising from their sacrifice to the gift of earth; in days of vore king Rantideva performed a grand sacrifice, in which an immense number of kine were alaughtered; from the juice of their skins the river Carmanvati was formed; king Rantideva. in days of yore, ascended to heaven on account of his having given gifts of food; the cow should never be given away for slaughter; what kine should not be given to brahmans; he referred to Paragara; the seasons when gifts of food produce particular merits (XIII, 66). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma dealt with the merits that attach to gifts of drink, quoting Savitri and Lomaça and Manu, and mentioning Cibi; Soma, etc.  $(\eta)$ , has sprung from water; D. have ampta for their food, N. have Sudhā, P. have Svadhā (XIII, 67). Yudhishthira asked about the merits that attach to gifts of sesame and lamps for lighting darkness, as also of food and robes: Bhishma told the narrative of the conversation between a brahman and Yama, in ancient times, in the large town of Parnaçala (inhabited by brahmans) between Yamuna and Gangā, at the foot of the Yamuna hills; one day Yama commanded a messenger of his (description) to bring the person named Carmin of Agastya's race from this town (Agastyam gotratah), not confounding him with another of the same gotra; he should be worshipped with respect. The messenger did the very reverse; Yama ordered this man to be taken back and Carmin to be brought; the former was, however, first instructed by Yama regarding gifts. Then the messenger conveyed him back and fetched Carmin: Yama, having given him the same instructions, dismissed him to be taken back to his abode. The giver of a lamp is regarded as benefiting the Pitrs and Yama; it enhances the power of vision of D., P., and one's self; citing Manu about a gift of gems (XIII, 68). Bhishma, at Yudhishthira's sólicitation, reverted to the topic of the merits of gifts, with especial reference to the gift of earth; a cow should never be given to a person that is not righteous (XIII, 69). The tale of the calamity that befell king Nrgs, who had unwittingly taken a cow belonging to a brahman and given it away to another brahman. Formerly, when Draracati was founded (read with B. nivicantyam), a huge lizard was seen (or met with?) in a well; Krehna took it out and learnt that it was king Nrga, who in days of old had performed many sacrifices and repeatedly made gifts of hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of kine to the brahmans; a brahman's cow had accidentally come among Nrga's and been given to another brahman, whose weak child it nourished; neither of them would take the most exorbitant gifts in exchange; after death, when he came to the region of the Pitre, Yama let him choose as his punishment for this little sin to become a lizard for 1,000 years, till he was rescued by Vasudeva. Then Nrga mounted a celestial car and proceeded to heaven; a verse of Krehna's is quoted (XIII, 70). Yudhishthira asked Bhishma to further detail the merits attainable by gifts of kine. Bhishma told the old story of R. Uddalaki and his son Nāciketa, whom he had cursed to go and see Yama, because Naciketa had not found the articles (enumeration) he was sent for, as they had been washed away by the current. Naciketa fell down, deprived of life; Uddalaki indulged in lamentations; when the night came, Naciketa, drenched with his father's tears, revived, and in the midst of the Rehis told that he had been honoured in Yama's delightful palace, which extended over 1,000 yojanas; "Yama said that I was not dead, but had only come to see Yama in compliance with the words of my father"; Yama, at his request, had caused him to be mounted on a vehicle and showed him all those delightful regions that are reserved for the righteous (description), who make gifts in the world of men. especially gifts of kine, etc. (considerations of propriety or otherwise); in the absence of kine, a person by making gifts of a substitute of kine (e.g. a cow made of ghee) wins the merit of making gifts of kine; gifts of kine on kamyashtami, etc.; "I then took leave of Yama and have now come back" (XIIF, 71). Yudhishthira asked about the regions of kine, which are the residence of givers of kine. Bhishma related the old tale of the conversation between Brahman and Indra. who, seeing that the residents of the regions of kine surpassed the denizens of heaven, asked Brahman about them (XIII, 72). The comments of Brahmán to Indra on the subject of kine, reference being made to Rohis, etc. (XIII, 73). Asked by Indra, Brahman spoke about the end of him who consciously steals a cow or sells one from motives of cupidity. Bhishma explained how Brahmán's discourse had been handed down from Indra to Bhlishma: Brahmán > Indra > Daçaratha > Rāma [Dacarathi] > Lakehmana > the Rehie (while dwelling in the woods) > from generation to generation > Bhishma's preceptor > Bhishma. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 74). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma explained the rewards that attach to the observance of different kinds of vows: many millions of R. arc residing in Brahmaloka (XIII, 75). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma commented upon the ordinances that regulate gifts of kine, quoting the instruction given by Brhaspati to king Mandhatr; "kine have that in them that partakes of the nature of both Surya and Soma!'; application of the words bhavitavya, etc.  $(\theta)$ ; all the three [cow-givers], etc., and he who is well conversant with the Makabharata attain to the regions of Vishau and Soma; names of kings who have attained to regions of great felicity as the reward of such gifts of kine as they made according to the instructions of Brhaspati: Uçinara, etc. (1).—Vaiçampāyana eaid: King Yudhichthire did all that Bhishma wished; he

from that time began always to make gifts of kine and to support himself on grains of barley and on cow-dung as his food and drink, and he began to sleep from that day on the bare earth, and gave up the practice of harnessing kine to his vehicles, and used cars drawn by horses (XIII, 76). Vaicampayana continued: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma once more went into detail on the merits attaching to the gift of kine: a Kapila cow is the best of all kine; Yudhishthira asked why; Bhishma said he had heard old men tell the following story: In days of yore Brahman commanded Daksha to create living creatures; Daksha, in the first instance, created food; he drank ampta, a fragrant eructation came out, and gave birth to the cow Surabhi. whose daughters came to be regarded as the mothers of the world; they were all Kapilas; some froth from the calves fell upon the head of Mahadeva, who, filled with wrath, turned his third eye towards them, which produced various complexions in them; some escaped to the region of Soma and retained their colour. Daksha informed Civa that this froth was amrta and not impure; Candramas (the Moon), after drinking the amrta, pours it out again; but it is not, on that account, regarded as impure. Dakeha then presented Mahadeva with a bull and certain kine; Mahadeva was gratified and made that bull his vehicle, and after the form of that bull adopted the device on his standard; it was on that occasion also that the gods, uniting together, made Mahadeva the lord of animals. Cows yield Soma in the form of milk. Blessing upon the reader .-- Vaicampayana continued: Yudhishthira and his brother began to make gifts of both bulls and cows of different colours to brahmans, Yudhishthira performing many sacrifices (XIII, 78). Bhishma said: In days of yore, king Saudasa of Ikshvaku's race asked his purchita R. Vasishtha what is most sacred and most productive of merit; Vasishtha enlarged upon the mystery relating to kine; sound and cashat are for ever established in kine; what is meant by Gomati (XIII, 78). Continuation of Vasishtha's discourse on the pre-eminent sanctity of kine; the diverse merits attaching to gifts of different kinds of kine: Brahmaloka, etc. (x), (XIII, 79). Vasishtha commented on the purificatory mantras having reference to kine; "those who make gifts of 1,000 kine, departing from this world, proceed to the region of G. and Aps., where there are many palatial mansions made of gold, and Vasor dhara (i.e. Mandakini, Nil.); . . . by giving away a Kapild cow, etc., one succeeds in entering the palace of Yama that is so difficult to enter." - Bhishma said: Saudāsa, honouring these words of R. Vasishtha, made gifts of a very large number of kine unto the brahmans, and attained to many worlds of felicity in the next life (XIII, 80). Yudhishthira asked what is the most sacred of all sacred things in the world, and which is the highest of all sanctifying objects. Bhtshma said: Kine are the most excellent of all objects, etc.; Mandhair, etc. (λ), always used to give away kine in thousands, and have attained to such regions as are unattainable even by the gods; he quoted a discourse delivered of old. Cuke (having finished his morning observances) asked R. Fydes what is the foremost of all sacrifices, and was instructed by him, who praised kine and described the region of kine which the blessed only attain; Aps. always entertain them there; those regions that have for their lords Pashen and the Marute are attained to by givers of kine: they attain to wealth like that of Varune himself: one should daily recite these mantres (a) declared by Projupati

himself. [In this section Yudhishthira has repeatedly been addressed instead of Cuka. ] The man who, for a month, subsists upon the gruel of barley picked up every day from cow-dung, becomes free of sins as grave as the slaughter of a brahman: after their defeat at the hands of Dai., the gods practised this penance, owing to which they regained their position; the efficaciousness of the Gomati mentras.-Bhishms said: From that time Çuks began to worship kine every day (XIII, 81). Yudhishthira asked how it is that the dung of the cow is possessed of Cri. Bhishma told the old story of the conversation between the kine and Crt, who once in a beautiful form entered a herd of cows, saying: "The Daityas, forsaken by me, have been lost for ever; the gods Indra, etc. (v), having obtained me, are sporting in joy and will do so for ever; R. and D. only when they are favoured by me become crowned with success"; she wished to reside in the kine; they refused her, saying she was fickle and restless. Cri said: "D., Da., G., Pg., U., Ra., and men succeed in obtaining me only after the severest austerities"; they agreed that she should live in their urine and dung (XIII, 82). Bhishma continued his discourse on kine, repeating the old tale of the discourse between Brahmán and Indra, after Dai. had been defeated and all creatures grew in prosperity; then once R., G., K., U., Ra., D., As., the birds, and the Prajupatie all adored Brahman; Narada, etc. (§), sang, etc. (o); Indra asked him about the region of kine; Brahmán said that Indra had always disregarded kine, and commented to him on the superiority of kine. He explained to him why kine have descended to earth: In days of yore, when in the Deva-yuga the Danavae became lords of the three worlds, Aditi underwent the severest austorities (standing upon one leg for many years) and begot Vishnu; seeing Aditi perform penances, Surabhi, the daughter of Daksha, also underwent austerities on Kailasa (resorted to by D. and G.), in yoga, standing upon one leg for 11,000 years; "D., R., and M.-U. became scorched and repaired thither with me (Brahmán); as she did not herself ask a favour, I granted her the boon of immortality, and that she should dwell in Goloka, while her offspring, engaged in doing good acts, would reside in the world of men (description of Goloka)." Bhishma continued: From that time Cakra began to worship kine every day. Blessing upon the reader, etc. (XIII, 83) .- § 747: Yudhishthira asked why gold, in the Crutis, is declared to be even superior to kine as a dakshind, and what gold is, etc. Bhishma related the circumstances connected with the origin of gold: "When my father Cantanu was dead, I wout to Gangadrara to perform his craddha; Ganga came and rendered me great help (description); a handsome arm, adorned with angadas, etc., rose up piercing the ground; the P. did not come in their visible forms to take the cake; I, therefore, disregarding the hand, offered the whole cake on blades of kuça-grass, according to rule; then the arm of my father vanished. In that night the Pitrs appeared to me in a dream, pleased by my adherence to the rules, whereby I had honoured the authority of the scriptures, etc. (a); I had made gifts of earth and kine; now I should make gifts of gold. Listen now to this old story, that extends the period of life for him who listens to it; it was first recited to Ruma Jumadagnya, who in former days exterminated the Kehattriyas twenty-one times; by performing a horse-sacrifice he became free from sin, but he still failed to attain to perfect lightness of heart; he repaired to R. and D., then to

Vasishtha, etc. (3); they told him that in days of yore Agni burnt all the world; from his seed sprang gold; he should make gifts of gold; Vasishtha in especial commented on gold: it is the essence of Agni and Soma, etc.  $(\gamma)$ ; such is the teaching of the Smrtie; in churning the entire universe a mass of energy (i.e. gold) was found; hence gold is superior; D., G., U., Ra., men, and Pc. keep it with care; Agni is all the deities in one, and Agni is the essence of gold. I formerly heard this in the Purana; it represents the speech of Prajapati himself." Then he related Suvarnotpatti (b), (XIII, 84-85) .- § 748 : Asked by Yudhishthira (who refers to § 747b), Bhishma related Tarakavadhopakhyana (b), (XIII, 86) .- § 749: Asked by Yudhishthira (who perhaps refers to § 641 - XII, 60 ff.), Bhishma explained the ordinances respecting the craddha. D., As., men, G., Pc., K., every one should always worship P. P. are worshipped before the gods. The merits and demerits of the different lunar days for performing the craddha: 1st-13th days of the bright fortnight are auspicious; all the young men in the family of him who performs it on the 14th day meet with death, and he himself becomes entangled in war; the day of the new moon and 10th-13th days of the dark fortnight are auspicious; the dark fortnight is better than the bright one, the afternoon better than the forenoon (XIII, 87). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma explained what, if presented to P., becomes inexhaustible and eternal, and the periods for which different offerings presented at craddhas gratify the P., quoting some verses [originally] sung by P. and communicated to him by Sanatkumara, recommending payasa with ghee on the 13th day [of the dark fortnight, PCR.] under Maghah during the Sun's southward course, and, under the same constellation, meat of goat, etc., and graddhas at Gaya (b), (XIII, 88); the different merits acquired by persons by performing optional (kāmyāni) grāddhas under various nakshatras, and which were [first] explained by Yama to Cacabindu: by performing such a craddha under the Krttikas, "a man acquires the merit of a sacrifice after establishing the sacred fire, and ascends to heaven with his children "(PCR.), etc. (a). Having listened to these ordinances about the graddha, Caçabindu acted accordingly, and easily subjugated and ruled the earth (XIII, 89). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma explained to what kinds of brahmans the offerings made at graddhas should be given away, quoting the Vaikhanasa Rehis (XIII, 90). Asked by Yudhishthira by whom the craddha was first conceived, etc., in the time when the world was only peopled by the descendants of Bhrgu and Angiras (Bhrgv-Angirasake kale), etc., Bhishma said : Brahman > Atri > Dattatroya > Nimi > Crimat. After 1,000 years Crimat died, having undergone the severest austerities: Nimi, filled with grief, collected various agreeable objects on the 14th day of the moon, and the next morning he conceived the idea of a craddha; on the day of the new moon he invited a number of respected brahmans, gave food to seven such brahmans, and made an offering of cakes of rice to his dead son, uttering his name and family (nama-gotram). He then became filled with regret, having done an act that was not laid down in the scriptures [that a father had done with reference to his son what sons ought to do with reference to their fathers, PCR.]; he thought of Atri, who came and comforted him, saying that this sacrifice in honour of the Pitre had been laid down and its rites regulated by Brahman himself in days of yore: one should pour out libations to Agns, etc. (3); the gods named Pitre [and] Ushnapas [so B. and C.; cf. BR., v. Ushmapa] were created by Srayambha (i.e. Brahman) and consist of seven classes (saptakah pitrvemças tu): when they are honoured by a graddha, they become freed from sin; the Viçvedevas [sixty-four (7) are enumerated], having Agni for their mouth, they are eternal (? Kalasya gatigocarah; C. osyagao; "eternal and conversant with all that occurs in time," PCR.). Articles that should not be offered at graddhas. From the place of a graddha a Candala and a Crapaca should be excluded, as also one who wears yellow clothes (Kashayarasah), a leper, an outcast (patitah), etc. Having said this to R. Nimi, Atri went back to the celestial palace of Pitamaha (Brahmán) (XIII, 91). After Nimi had acted in this way, M .- r. performed a graddha. The Pitrs and gods became afflicted with indigestion in consequence of the offerings (nivapa) made by persons of the four castes. They repaired to Soma, and thence to Svayambhu (on the summit of Moru), and thence to Agni. Agni told them to eat those offerings together with him. It is for this reason that in making offerings at craddhas a share is first offered to Agni; then also the Brahma-Rakshasas cannot do any injury to the crāddha; but the Rakshases fly away from it (v. 4383-4). The cake should first be offered to the [deceased] father, then to the grandfather, then to the great-grandfather; at each cake the Savitri should be uttered (Somayeti ca vaktavyam tathā pitrmateti ca); a woman of another gotra (anyavamçajā), etc., should not assist at a craddha; while crossing a river, one should offer oblations of water to one's P., and also on the day of the new moon (masardhhe krshnapakshasya): this gives prosperity, etc.; Brahmán, etc. (?), are great masters of yoga and [numbered among] P. (XIII, 92).- § 750: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma said that brahmans who are observant of vows not mentioned in the Vedas may eat at graddhas without incurring sin; but not so those who are observant of vows mentioned in the Vedas. Penance is not really identifiable with fast; one should not torment one's own body; renunciation is the best of penances; the brahman should cat Vighasa or Amrta (i.e. food that remains after the guests, etc., have eaten); one should only eat morning and evening at the prescribed hours, etc.; such men obtain felicity in the abode of Brahmán in the company of Aps. and G. If the giver happens to be unrighteous, the receiver sinks into hell. In this connection an old tale of a conversation between Vrshudarbhi and the seven Rshis is told: Bisastainyopäkhyäna (b) (XIII. 93).-§ 751: Bhishma said: In this connection the old story of the oaths on the occasion of a tirthayatra [i.e. Capathavidhi] is told (b) (XIII, 94).-§ 752: Asked by Yudhishthira by whom the custom of giving umbrellas and sandals at craddhas was introduced, Bhishma related the story of the discourse between Jamadagni and Sūrya [i.e. Chattropunahotpatti] (b). " Do thou, therefore, give away umbrellas and shoes to brahmans. He who gives away a white umbrella with 100 ribs to a brahman attains to eternal felicity after death in Çakra-loks, being respected by brahmans, Aps., and D." (XIII, 95-96).- § 753: Asked by Yudhishthira about the dutics of a householder, Bhishma recited the old story of Vasudeva (Krshna) and the goddess Prthirl (Earth), who instructed Vasudeva on this very topic: R., D., P., and men should be worshipped . . . ; he should perform an Agni-Shoma, Vaicundeva, and Dhancantarya offering, and separately an offering to Prajanam pati; and bali to Yama, etc. (a); he should daily perform a craddha (description); he should take his food last of all (cishtaci); he should with madhunarka honour a king, rtrij, guru, father-in-law, and enataka; in the evening and morning he should place food on the ground for dogs, crapacas, and birds: this is called the Vaicradera offering. Vasudeva acted accordingly (XIII, 97).- § 754: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma, in order to explain the gift of lamps, flowers, and incense, told the old story of the discourse between one Prajapati Manu Svayambhuva and the learned and noble brahman Sucarna (so called from his golden complexion) on the golden mountain Meru. Asked by Surarna about the above-named topic, Manu related the old history of the discourse between Cukra Bhargava and the Asura king Bali Vairocana, who ruled the three worlds. Asked by Bali about this very topic, Cukra discoursed on the plants (having Soma for their lord), of which some are amrta (and agreeable to the gods, etc.) and some poison; some are acceptable to As., some to the gods, Ru., U., Y., men, P.; garlands of water flowers should be offered to G., N., and Y.; plants with red flowers and keen scent and having thorns have been laid down in the Atharvans as fit for incaptation in order to injure foes, etc.; D. become gratified with the scent of flowers, Y. and Ra. with their sight, N. with their touch, men with all three. Among incenses, all exudations (except that of the Boswellia serrata) are agreeable to the gods; that of Aquilaria Agallocks to Y., Rū., and N.; that of Boswellia serrata, etc., to Dai., etc. [For avoiding] Andhatamas (B. oam tao; a certain hell, NIL.), darkness, and the sun's southward course, one should give lights during the sun's northward course (NII. and the note of PCR., p. 477); D. are resplendent, Ra. dark: hence one should always give lights, etc.; thereby a man attains to the same world as the celestial lights (jyotisham salokyam). The merits of bali-offerings made to D., Y., U., men, Bhatas, and Ra. Y., Ru., Pn., D., P., etc., are supported by the food offered by the householder; the bali offered to Y. and Ra. should be rich in blood and meat, wines and spirits, etc.; belie with lotuses and utpalas are agreeable to N.; sesame seeds with sugar to the Bhatas. He who cats without first serving brahmans and gods and guests and children, should be known as a Rū. Thus said Kūvya Bhūrgara to Boli; then Mann > Suvarna > Narada > Bhishma (XIII, 98) .- § 755: Yudhishthirs (referring to § 754) once more questioned Bhishms on this subject; Bhishma told the old story of the discourse between Nahusha and Agastya and Bhrgu i.e. Nahushopakhyāna(XIII, 99-100).-- §756: Asked by Yudhishthira where those men go who steal articles belonging to brahmans, Bhishma related the old conversation between a Candala and a Kehattriya (Kehattrabandhoh), who wondered that the old Candala, whose body was besmeared with the dust raised by dogs and asses, without minding that dust, was anxious to wash off the small drops of milk that had fallen upon his body; the Candala related that formerly some kine belonging to a brahman were stolen, and some milk from them fell upon some Soma plants that grew by the roadside; the king who performed the sacrifice with this Soma, the brahmans who drank its juice, those who had assisted at the sacrifice, and those who drank milk, etc., in the palace of this king, had to fall into hell, as also the sons and grandsons of those who had stolen them, and the queen, although she treated the animals with great care. The Candala himself, who had lived in the observance of brahmacarya in that place, and whose alms had been sprinkled with the milk of the kine, had in this life become a Candala. It is for this reason that the Soma plants become unsaleable, and the persons who sell and who purchase them both sink into the Raurara-hell, when they repair to the region of Yama, etc. "Behold also this miserable dog!" In a former life the Candale was born in a noble family, but out of pride he ate the mest attached to the vertebral column of animals, and thence he had attained to his present state; in consequence of some meritorious act in a former life, he had retained the memory of his previous existences. Asked by the Candala, the kehattriya told him (in order to obtain emancipation (mekeha) from his state of a Candala) to give up his life for the sake of a brahman. This the Candals did in a battle for protecting a brahman's wealth, and attained to a desirable end (XIII, 101).- § 757: Asked by Yudhishthira whether there is a difference of position among righteous men after death, Bhishma related the old narrative of the conversation between the muni Gautama and Indra [i.e. Hastikuta] (b) (XIII, 102).-(†) § 758: Asked by Yudhishihira what constitutes the highest penance, Bhishma said that there is no penance superior to abstention from food, and told the old story of the conversation between king Bhagiratha and Brahman. Bhagiratha had transcended the world of the gods, that of kine, and that of the Rehie; beholding this, Brahmán asked him how he had attained to that region, where neither gods, nor G., nor men succeed in coming without having practised the severest austerities; Bhagiratha enumerated his sacrifices, his penances on the Jahnavi (Ganga), etc. (a); those on the banks of Saraya, etc. (b), he gave away millions of kine to the brahmans. "It is not through the merits of those acts that I have attained to this region. but through the vow of fast, which had been known to Indra, who had kept it secret, but which Bhargava Uçanas had learnt through penance († v. 5945); all brahmans and R. gratified me, saying that I should repair to Brahmaloka." Bhag!ratha was honoured by Brahman (XIII, 103).—§ 759: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the reason why, a man's period of life being said to extend over 100 years. one becomes short-lived or long lived; one should awake at the Brahma muhurta [i.e. at the hour when the sun is just below the horizon, PCR.]; R. by adoring the two twilights became long-lived; one should avoid atheism (nastikyam), calumniating the Vedas, censuring the gods, etc.; one should also wash one's feet before sitting down to recite the Vedas or to eat any food; one should perform the homes for propitiating the gods (cantihoman) and recite the Savitra mantras (Sāvitrāņi ca dhārayet; i.e. mantraviçeshān, NU.); persons conversant with ancient history cite a gatha sung by Yama in days of old (about running-pradravati, B.-or studying with uncleansed mouth); "he who studies at forbidden times, loses his Veda and shortens his life" (v. 5026-8); nor should one eat at the craddhs of an enemy; the spots of the hand named Brahma tirtha, etc. (a); having drunk water thrice, etc., one should worship the P. and gods according to the ordinances of the Vedas (v. 5065); a brahman should perform [the acamana] (camupaepreet) in all the purificatory acts with the Brahma tirtha (v. 5066); one should never perform any act in honour of P. in the nighttime (v. 5075); one should wash his head before performing any act in honour of P. or gods (v. 5081); one should never perform [a craddha] under the constellation of one's nativity. nor under the two Proshthapadas, nor under Agneya (i.e. Krttikah, Nil.), nor under flerce [nakehatras, such as Aclesha, etc., PCR.], nor under those that are hostile (pratyarine), or those mentioned [i.e. forbidden] in the Jyotisha (v. 5082-8); a woman of the same pravara (samarshām), etc., should be avoided [in wedding] (v. 5086); one should accomplish all acts ordained in the Veds or by the Brahmenes (v. 5092); one should study the Disnurveds and the Veds (v. 5100); "you should know the science of reasoning (Yuktiquetram), the science of words (Cabdaçastram), the Gandharvaçastra, and the [64] Kalde, [and] one should always hear the Purdus and stikleds and the narratives that exist (akhyanani yani ca), and the biographies (caritam) of high-minded persons" (v. 5102-3); good conduct (dearsh) is superior to all lore (agamanam); this fame-producing, etc., [discourse] has been uttered by Brahman out of compassion on all creatures (v. 5112) (XIII, 104). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma expounded how the eldest brother should behave towards his younger brothers and the younger ones towards the eldest; "the upadhyaya is superior to 10 activas; the father to 10 upadhyayas; the mother to 10 fathers or [even] to the whole earth; there is no guru equal to the mother" (v. 5126-7) (XIII, 105). Asked by Yudhishthira if only brahmans and kshattriyas should observe fasts (the very Misschas observe them), Bhishma related what R. Angiras had said to him in answer [essentially in the negative] to this same question, indicating the merits of fast on different days and different months ( $\beta$ ), by which fasts the merit of different sacrifices ( $\gamma$ ) are acquired, or the abode of the Aps., or Brahmaloka attained; there is no penance superior to fast: by fasts the gods became denisens of heaven, and R. attained to the highest success (siddhim); witness Victamitra, and Cyavana, etc. (δ), who attained to heaven through fasts. In former days Angiras declared so to M.-r. + (XIII, 106). Yudhishthira, saying that sacrifices are incapable of being performed by people that are poor, as they require a large store of diverse kinds of articles, wherefore the merit attaching to them can only be acquired by kings and princes, asked Bhishma about acts fraught with merit equal to that of sacrifices and capable of being performed by persons destitute of means. Bhishma related the ordinances about fasts that were promulgated by Angiras; the regions attainable by them (e) and the sacrifices they are equal to (3) (XIII, 107). Asked by Yudhishthira about that which is the foremost of all tirthae, Bhishma mentioned and described Manasa tirtha [in the figurative sense of the soul]; but also the tirthus of the earth are possessed of merit; by reciting the name of a tirtha, by bathing there, and by gladdening P. there, one casts off one's sins and goes to heaven (v. 5365) (XIII, 108). Asked by Yudhishthira as to what is the highest, etc., kind of fast, Bhishma said: [A = "that man who fasts on the 12th day of the moon in the month so called"; B = "and, for the whole day and night, worships Krehna as Keçava, etc."; C - "obtains the merits of the horse sacrifice, etc."; D -"and freedom from sin, etc."]

The result of adoring Krihas as Pundarikakshs, etc. (η). At the conclusion of one's vow, one should feed a number of brahmans or make gifts of ghee to them. Vishau has said that there is no fast superior to that (XIII, 109). Vaiçampāyans said: Approaching Bhishma, who was lying on his bod of arrows, Yudhishihira asked how one does acquire beauty, etc. Bhishma said that a Candravrata should be commenced in Margaçirsha, when the moon comes in conjunction with Mala:

[The figures in brackets indicate the number in the ecliptic; Abhijit [22] is wanting.] Then gifts of ghee to learned brahmans; one becomes as accomplished (paripurnangah) as the full moon (XIII, 110).- § 760: Yudhishthira asked, what regulates rebirth, etc. Bhishma directed him to ask Brhaspati, as none else was capable of explaining the matter. Vaicampayana said: While they were thus speaking Brhaspati came from heaven; Yudhishthira with Dhrtarüshtra, etc., honoured him; then Yudhishthira asked him, what is truly the friend of mortal creatures, and what follows man to the next world. Brhaspati said: Righteousness. Yudhishthira asked, how righteousness can accompany the dead body. Brhaspati said that the soul (fiva) obtains a new body according to its merit, Yama, etc. (a), being the witnesses, etc. Deities dwelling in the body, viz. earth, etc.  $(\beta)$ . After birth Jiva receives were and death from the messengers of Yama; if imbued with unrighteousness, Jiva has to go to the dominions of Yama, and after suffering great misery there, he has to undergo rebirth as an animal, or as some other kind of being, as declared in the Fedas and the scriptures (fastre) with the histories (estildes). In the regions of Yama there are places worthy of being the abodes even of the deities. and which are equal to Brahmaloka, but also such as are worse than [those of animals]. Different forms in which Jies has to take birth in consequence of different acts (e.g. as a Brahma - Rakshasa; as Missochas). [The periods that elapse before one recovers human existence are here generally very short, some few months or years.] "I heard all this in days of old from Brahman himself in the midst of the surarshie" (XIII, 111). Asked by Yudhishthira, Brhaspati explained by what acts people, having committed sin, attain to an auspicious end in this world and in heaven. especially recommending gifts of food (praised by D., R., P., and men), citing Rantideva (b) (XIII, 112). Asked by Yudhishthira, Brhaspati discoursed on the six doors of righteousness (abstention from injury, the observance of the Vedic ritual, meditation, restraining the senses, penances, and obedience to preceptors), saying that the man who practises the religion of universal compassion achieves the highest good, etc. Vaicampāyana said: Then Brhaspati ascended to heaven. [XIII. 111-113 are called Samedracakra] (XIII, 113).-§ 761: Vaiçampdyana said: After this Yudhishthira, addressing Bhishma (lying on his bed of arrows), said: R., D., and brahmans, led by the authority of the Vedas, praise the religion of compassion; but how does a man who has injured others in word, thought, and deed, succeed in freeing himself from misery? Bhishma recommended abstention from meat; meat, moreover, enslaves the mind by taste (XIII, 114). Yudhishthira (referring to § 749) wondered how, when abstention from injury is the highest religion, persons should make offerings of meat in craddhas in honour of P. Bhishma referred to the innumerable discourses on this topic that had taken place between R., and strongly recommended abstention from honey and meat, referring to the seven R. (Saptarshayah), etc. (a), and quoting Manu, etc. ( $\beta$ ); he who eats flesh of animals slain by others incurs the sin that attaches to the slaughter; he who purchases flesh slays living creatures through his wealth (the eater's demerit is, however, not so great as the slayer's); by eating flesh left from sacrifices [to D. and P.; v. especially Agastya] and of animals that have been slain for feeding brahmans, one incurs a small fault. In old time persons who wanted to attain to regions of merit hereafter, performed sacrifices with seeds. Especially in the month of Karttika or in its bright fortnight one should abstain from [honey and] meat, which many ancient kings have done: Nabhaga, etc.  $(\gamma)$ ; those who abstain from flesh for months or fortnights continuously, have Brahmaloka reserved to them. (It is by truthfulness that Hariccandra roves through heaven like a second Candramas.) Also the kings Cyenacitra, etc. ( $\delta$ ), did not eat flesh during the month of Karttika, and, therefore. attained to Brahmaloka, adored by G. and surrounded by 1,000 beautiful damsels. The eaters of meat go to Hell; he who practises the religion of abstention from meat or teaches it to others will never have to go to Hell, even if he be exceedingly wicked in other respects \* (XIII, 115). Asked by Yudhishthira what can be eaten, etc., Bhishma discoursed on what is flesh, and continued the preceding discourse, again mentioning Agastya; snakes, etc. (s), never hurt him who is devoted to compassion; those who are covetous of meat are cooked in the hell called Kumbhipāka: etymology of the word mames (flesh) (XIII, 116).—§ 762: Asked by Yudhishthira what end those attain to who give up their lives in battle, though to-give up life is difficult for men, whether they are in prosperity or adversity, Bhishma explained the old narrative of the conversation, in former times, between Fydes and a worm: Kitopakhyana (b) (XIII, 117-119).- 5 763: Asked by Yudhishthira about the relative superiority of knowledge, penances, and gifts, Bhishma told the old narrative of the conversation between Maitreya and Vydes: Maitreya-bhikshā (b) (XIII, 120-122).—

and then to perform one's ablutions; to offer cooked food with honey, in an udumbara vessel, as bali to the moon on the evening of the day of full-moon, which offer is accepted by Sa., etc. (7), and whereby Some and the Ocean increase (spoken by Fishau). Bhishma said that these mysteries (respected by D. and promulgated by Vydes) are even superior to the whole earth († v. 6198), and should not be imparted to any unbeliever, etc. (XIII, 134).—§ 767: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma enumerated those persons from which a brahman, a kehattriya, a vaiçya, and a çadra may take his food, etc. (XIII, 135). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma expounded the expiations which purify a brahman of the sin he incurs by accepting forbidden food (especially offered to D. and P.); without having performed his ablutions, a brahman should not say his evening prayers, etc.; for this reason the craddha has been ordained to be performed in the afternoon (XIII, 136). Asked by Yudhishthira which is better, charity (dana) or devotion (tapas), Bhishma enumerated the pious princes who have attained to heavon (lokah)(a). "These and many other men (householders) have attained to heaven by charity and penances, and return again and again. As night approaches, I shall explain to thee in the morning whatever doubts may arise in thy mind" (XIII, 137). Asked by Yudhishthira (who refers to XIII, 137), Bhishma discoursed on the five kinds of gifts: from desire of merit, from desire of profit, from fear, from free choice, and from pity; Brahmán has said that one should always make gifts according to one's power (XIII, 138).- § 768: Yudhishthira, complaining of the distress of the time, asked Bhishma to discourse or religion and profit in the presence of Krehna Vaiçampāyana said that Bhishma recited and all the kings the discourses on the puissance of Vishau in days of yore (and the doubt of Rudra and his spouse). Once Krshpa observed a vow for twelve years in order to obtain a son; Narada, etc. (a), came there with Si., etc. (description of their seats); fire issued from the mouth of Krehna and consumed the summit of the mountain with all its living creatures, then it came back and touched his feet; he cast a benignant look upon the mountain, which once more became adorned and peopled as before. Asked by R., Krehna explained that, in consequence of his penances, his soul became transformed into fire and repaired to Brahman (who told it that half of the energy of Cive would take birth as Krehne's son), and then went back; "I now ask you to tell me something that is highly wonderful, which you have heard of or seen on earth or in heaven." R. glorified Krahaa, and asked by them, Narada described the wonderful incident on Himavat, "which was witnessed by R. on their tirthayatra" (XIII, 139). Bhishma said: Then R. Narada, the friend of Krehna, told the following story of the discourse between Cira and Umā: Umā-Maheçvara-samvāda (b) (XIII, 140-148). Bhishma said: Krehna paid honour to R., who praised Krshna, approving of what Civa had said of him, and saying that they had told him [about the discourse of Civa with Uma], only to please him, since he had asked them: but "there is nothing in the three worlds that is unknown to thee." R. took leave of Krehna, promising him that he would soon get an excellent son. Krshna returned to Draraka. Rukmini, after the tenth month, bore a son who is identified with Kama, which exists in every creature and moves within the hearts of both gods and Asuras. Praise of Krehns - Vichnu Trivikrans - the thirty-three gods with Index - Adidees (the first god), etc. Bhishma congratulated the Pandavas, especially Arjuna, and pitied Duryodhana; many Dai. and Da. have been slain by Krehpa, witness Civa's utterances (purdnam) on Himsust to R.; the greatness, etc., of Arjuna can only come up to one-third of that of Krehna. Bhushma consoled Yudhishthira (it is Time - Krekes who has slain the warriors), citing Vydes and Nareds. Nareds and Vydea have told me that " Krehna and Arjuna (triyugau) practised penances in Badart for 10,000 years"; he mentioned his slaying of Kamea; the destruction of the Kurus is due to Duryodhana, etc. (e). Yudhishthira remained silent; the kings with Dhytarushtra, and R. with Nureda, applauded Bhishma and worshipped Krehns. When Bhishma had rested and become refreshed, Yudhishthira once more asked him (XIII, 148).- § 769: Vaiçampāyana said: Yudhishihira asked Bhishma: who is the one god, which the foremost of all religions, and by what prayer does one become freed from the bonds of birth and transmigration (janmasametrabandhanāt). Bhīshma answered: "Always uttering the 1,000 names of the eternal Vishau Purushottama, the great Brahmán, etc., which were sung by the R." (v. 6949 wants in B.: Viehņor nāmasahaeraeya Vedavyūso mahān rehiḥ | Chando 'nushtup tatha Dovo Bhagavan Dovakisulah). Then he enumerated Vishpu's (- Keçava's v. 7057 = Vasudeva's v. 7061, 7066, etc. - Krehas's v. 7071) 1,000 names.\* "The moveable and immoveable world with D., As., G., Y., U., and Ra., is under the sway of Krshna; R., P., D., etc., have sprung from Narayana; the Yoga, the Sankhya, the crafts (cilpan), the Vedas, the Castras, etc., have sprung from Jandrdana; one should recite this hymn in praise of Vishau, composed (kirttitam) by Vydsa" (XIII, 149). -§ 770: Asked by Yudhishthira about the [mantra] which gives righteousness and success on setting out on a journey, or on entering [a new building], or at the commencement of any undertaking, or in sacrifices to D. and P., etc., Bhishma recited a mantra promulgated by Vydes and ordained by Savitri, and which purifies from all sins, and which was recited in days of yore by the foremost R. († v. 7088-9): Salutations (namah) to Vasishtha, etc. (a); the eleven Rudras (the lords of the three worlds) are: Ajaikapad, etc. (β); in Catarudra they are 100; Amça, etc.  $(\gamma)$ , are the twelve Adityas, the sons of Kacyapa according to the Cruti; Dhara, etc. (δ), are the eight Vasus; Nasatya and Dasra are the two Acrine, the sons of Martisada, who came out of the nose of Sanjad; Mrtyu, Kala, V.-D., P. (endowed with forms), Mu., and Si. (devoted to penances and emancipation) are the invisible witnesses of all the good and bad acts of all beings, giving the regions of felicity (lokan stan) created by Prajapati to those that praise them, and residing in all the worlds; by praising these 33 [i.e. 11 + 12 + 8 + 2] gods (the lords of all hosts of beings) [and] Nandiçuera, etc. (e), one is cleaned of all sins; the R. [called] Manavas are Yavahrita, etc. (5); blazing like Rudra, Anala, and the Vasue. they rejoice in heaven with the gods after having performed good deeds on earth; the seven gurus of Indra [i.e. presumably Yavakrita - Bala Angirasa] live in the East, and by praising them one enjoys felicity in Indralobs; Unmuon, etc.  $(\eta)$ , are the seven riving of Dharmardja [i.e. Yama], and live in the South; Drdheyw, etc. (3), are the riving of Varues, and dwell in the West; Atri, etc. (1), are the seven gurus of Kubera, and dwell in the North; there are seven other Mu. in all the quarters, bestowers of fame, etc.; Dharms, etc. (a), are upholders of the earth; Rams, Fydes, Drong's son Agratthaman, and Lomaga; these are the celestial munic, distributed into seven groups [of] seven; they are the creators of peace [canti-) and good (-sweeti-) and the regents of the quarters (dicam palas); one should turn his face in that direction in which one of these R. live, and take refuge with him; they are the creators of all creatures and the purifiers of the worlds [this is the order in B., where v. 7121; Ramo Vydeas . . . is placed before v. 7120 : Canti-evaetikard loke . . . ]; Samvartta, etc. (including Samkhya and Yoga) (A), have practised severe penances and are celebrated over the three worlds; there are others resembling Rudra. in Brahmaloka, through whom the sonless obtains a son, and the poor obtains wealth; one should also praise Prthu, etc. (µ), [and] Sankhya and Yoga, Havya and Kavya, and Supreme Brahman; one should praise them morning and evening; then there is no fear from fire or thieves, nor from Pc. and Ra., etc.; P. eat that man's karya, and the gods his havya (so B.). who recites [these names: Savitri, v. 7146, 7149, 7158; mahad brahma Savilrigunakirtanam, v. 7150; Savitrim paramam gatim, v. 7155; Savitri brahma çaçvati, v. 7161] at his rites for D. and P.; they contribute to the peace (cantim) of all the four castes; when setting out on a journey, etc., on every occasion one should recite them; it is a great mystery of R., etc. This ancient tale contains the opinion of the accomplished (siddhasya) Paraçara, and in former days was recited to Indra; [it is] the veritable eternal Brdhman, the heart of all creatures and the eternal cruti; all [the princes] of the race of Surya and of Soma, i.e. the Rughavas and the Kurus. always recite it after having purified themselves (queayah); there is rescue from every calamity in always reciting [the names of ] D., seven R. (Saptershinan), and Dhrura; [+ v. 7157-8 are each of 38 syllables; † v. 7159-60 are each of  $2 \times 28$  syllables]: the old B.-r. Kāçyapa, etc. ( $\nu$ ), have worshipped them; [being] the opinion of Bharadvaja they were obtained by the sons of Rolks; having acquired them again from Vasishtha, Cakra and the Vasus vanquished all Da.; the man who makes a present of 100 cows with their horns covered with gold to a learned brahman, and he who causes the excellent Bharats story to be always recited, these two acquire [equal] merit; the benefits obtained by praising Bhrgu, etc. (f) (XIII, 161).- 771: Asked by Yudhishthira what course of conduct towards the various classes of persons is regarded faultless, Bhishms eulogised the brahmans, who are attentive to P., D., and guests; who eat the first portions of havya and kavya; who by their very eating rescue the three worlds from great fear; whose wealth consists in all the cikehas and the cruti; whose wrath yet burns in the Dandaka wood, etc. (XIII, 152).- § 772: Asked by Yudhishihira what is the reward attached to the worship of brahmans, Bhishms told the old narrative of a conversation between Pavana (the Wind) and Arjuna [Kārtavīrya]: Pavanārjunasamvada (b) (XIII, 153-158). - § 778: Asked by Yudhishthira about the prosperity resulting from the worship of the brahmans, Bhishma, saying that the time of his death is not distant, and that he has recited all the duties mentioned in the Puranas, referred him to Krehna (b) (XIII, 159). Asked by Yudhishihirs what prosperity results from the worship of the brahmans, Krehns related what he in former times in Decreecti had answered his son Pradyumna, who was greatly excited by [some] brahmans and put this same question to him; they have Some for their king. He related the visit of Durvasas (e) (XIII, 160). Asked by Yudhishthira about the knowledge he had acquired from Durodeas, Krehna said that he would recite that Catarudriya which he repeats every morning, and which was composed by Prajapati at the end of his penances. Then he praised Civa (d) (XIII, 161-162). — § 774: Vaicampayana said: After Krehna had said these words, Yudhishthirs once more asked Bhishms which of the two, perception (pratyaksham) or the scriptures (agamas), should be [regarded as] authoritative for arriving at a conclusion (karanam bhavet). Bhishma answered that to affirm that perception is the only authority (as some persons do) is foolish; that knowledge which is derived from reasoning can scarcely be said to be knowledge,-Asked by Yudhishthira as to [which of these four is most authoritative, viz.] perception (pratyaksham), inference (lokatah siddhir, i.e. anumanam, Nil.), the teaching of the scriptures (lokaç cagamapurvakah), and the various kinds of good men's practice (cishfacaro bahuvidhah), he declared that as the might of unrighteous persons causes doubts to attach to perception, inference, and good conduct, good people who let themselves be led by the scriptures, and who are ever contented, should be resorted to for the solution of doubts.-As Yudhishthira remarked that, the veda, pratyaksha, and acare being all three pramana (authority) [as to what is dharms, i.e. righteousness], the one dharma would become threefold. Bhishma answered that dharma is really one, though capable of being viewed from three different points; he should not engage in such [unfruitful] speculations, but simply follow his instructions like a blind man, knowing that righteousness consists in abstention from injury, truth, absence of wrath, and liberality, and that conduct towards the brahmans that has been observed by his sires and grandsires. The fool who would deny that to be authority that [has always been accepted as ] authority, does not deserve to become an authority, for he creates [only] fright. - Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma said that those who hate righteousness have their hearts overwhelmed with passion and darkness and go to hell; those who observe righteousness go to heaven. The brahmans, who are the eldest sons of Brahman, represent lighteousness, and, therefore, they are worshipped by the righteous as a ripe fruit by a hungry man .- Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma indicated the acts that are characteristic of wicked and good men (curious enumeration): the good never talk while eating, and never go to sleep with wet hands; two times have been appointed by the deities for taking food, viz. morning and evening; in the meantime, one should not eat anything; when following this rule, one is said to observe a fast; one who never approaches his spouse at any other time save after her courses, is said to observe the vow of brahmacarya: ampta, brahmans, and kine are regarded as equal; one does not incur any fault by eating the meat of animals slain in sacrifices with mantras from the Yajurveda; the flesh of the backbone, or that of animals not slain in sacrifices, is as the flesh of one's own son; one should est in privacy; wellcooked frumenty, yavaka (B. yavāgām), kreara (C. oçao), and havis [should be used in] the Ashiakas of gods and P. and [in] worshipping the planets; one should not shave without calling down a blessing upon oneself; if one sneezes, he should be blessed ("catam jiva," Nil.) by those present; having committed a sin, one should confess it in the presence of those that are good; they would then destroy it; one should achieve righteousness in private, not make a show of righteousness; those are traders in righteousness who draw profit from it; one should lay up for oneself a treasure in the world to come, consisting in gifts made [here] to deserving persons (XIII, 163). Yudhishihira observed that the acquisition of wealth very often seems to be independent of exertion and learning, etc.; Bhishma said that when one, notwithstanding great exertion, fails to carn wealth, he should practise severe austerities, make gifts, abstain from cruelty, etc.; then happiness will be obtained [in the next life]; unless seeds be sown, no crops appear; even in the case of insects and ants, their acts for this and past lives] and Nature are the cause of happiness and woe i.e., the explanation of what seems unintelligible to Yudhishthira is to be sought for in the actions in past lives] (XIII, 164); to put faith in rightcoursess is the mark of wisdom; Time [which is the supreme disposer of all things] can never make rightcousness the cause of misery, and unrighteousness is incapable of touching righteousness, which is protected by time; righteousness is fraught with victory (XIII, 165). - § 775: Vaiçampāyana said: Desirous of obtaining such goods as are destructive of sins, Yudhishthira questioned Bhishma, who was lying on a bed of arrows. Yudhishthira said: What is beneficial for a person in this world? how can one be freed of all one's sins? Vaicampāyana said: In this connection Bhīshma recited the names of the gods to Yudhishthira. Bhishma said: These names of the gods and R., if recited morning, noon, and evening, become purifiers of sins; then one has never to become blind or deaf, etc., and never takes birth as an animal or in the mixed castes, nor goes to Hell; the names of the gods and R., etc., rivers, mountains, etc.; Brahmán, etc. (a); the Aps. ( $\beta$ ); learned brahmans in the eastern region ( $\gamma$ ), in the southern region  $(\hat{c})$ , in the western region  $(\epsilon)$ , in the north ( $\zeta$ ); the principal kings ( $\eta$ ) (to be recited at sunset and sunrise) (XIII, 166).-§ 776: Janamejaya said: When Bhishma was lying on a bed of arrows, and the Pandavas were sitting around him, my great-grandfather Yudhishthira heard these expositions of mysteries, etc.; what else did Yudhishthira do? Vaiçampāyana said: When Bhīshma became silent, all the kings became silent; then Vyasa, saying that Yulhishthira, etc., had now been restored to their own nature, asked Bhishma to give Yudhishthira leave to return to the city, which he did, giving Yudhishthira some final exhortations, and friendly asking him to return when the hour came for his death. Then Yudhishthira with his relatives and followers set out for Hastinapura, and entered the city with Dhrtarashtra, Gandhari, R., the citizens, the inhabitants of the country, and his counsellors (XIII, 167).

Anudyūta ("renewal of the gambling"). § 10 (Parvas.):

I, 2, 319 (sc. parva, i.o. Anudyūtaparvan).

Anudyūtaparvan. § 302: When the Pāṇḍavas had left Hūstinapura with all their wealth and jewels, Duḥçāsana complained of it to Duryodhana, who, with Karṇa and Çakuni, quoting the words of Bṛhaspati when counselling Indra about politics, and declaring that the Pāṇḍaras would certainly revenge themselves, prevailed upon Dhṛtarāshṭra to invite them a second time to a match of gambling between Yudhishṭhira and Çakuni, on the condition that the defeated party should repair to the woods for twelve years, dressed in deer-skins, and spend the thirteenth year in some inhabited country unrecognized, and if recognized, be exiled for another twelve years. If the Pandavas should succeed in observing this vow for thirteen years, the Dhartarashtras would in the meantime have made alliances and have assembled an invincible army, so that they could defeat them if they reappeared. Drona, Somadatta, Bühlika, Gautama, Vidura, Açvatthuman, Vaiçyāputra (i.e. Yuyutsu), Bhūricravas, Bhīshma, and Vikarna dissuaded in vain (II, 74).—§ 303: Gandhart reminded Dhrtarashtra of the counsel Vidura had given, when Duryodhana was born, to kill him, and recommended him to do it now, and not to let the gambling match take place, saying that it would cause the destruction of the whole race of the Kurus. But Dhrtarashtra could not act contrury to the will of his sous (II, 75).—§ 304: The royal messengers overtook Yudhishthira when he had already gone a long way. Yudhishthira having said, "Although a golden animal was an impossibility, Rama suffered himself to be tempted by a golden deer," they returned. The gambling began on the above-mentioned conditions (cf. III, 1362 ff., where the conditions are stated somewhat differently), and Yudhishthira lost (II, 76). The Pandavas, casting off their royal robes, attired themselves in doer-skins. Duhcasana exulted, and exhorted Krohni to abandon the fallen Pandaras and choose a husband among the Kurus. As Bhima rebuked him and threatened to slay him with his followers, Duhçasana, dancing around, said, "O cow! O cow!" Bhishma again swore to drink his blood and to kill all the Dhartarashtras. As the Pandaras were going away, Duryodhana mimicked the trend of Bhima, who then said: "I will slay Duryodhana with my mace, and place my foot on his head. Dhananjaya will slay Karna, and Sahadeva will slay Cakuni, and I will drink the blood of Duhçasana." Arjuna and Sahadeva approved of it. Nakula, "the handsomest of men," vowed to kill all the Dhartarashtras that had insulted Draupadi (II, 77) .- § 305: Yudhishthira bids furewell to Bhishma, Somadatta, Bühlika, Drona, Krpa, Açvatthuman, Vidura, Dhrtarushtra, the Dhurtarushtras Yuyutsu, Sanjaya, etc. Vidura kept Prthā in his abode, and consoled Yudhishthira: "Formerly thou wast instructed on the Himavat by Meru-Savarni, in Varanavata by Dvaipayana, on Bhrgutunga by Rama, on the Drehadrati by Cambhu, near Anjana by the great rehi Acita, by Bhrgu on the banks of Kalmāshī; Nārada always beholds thee, and this Dhaumya is thy purchita, -resolve to win victory like Indra, to control thy wrath like Yama, to give in charity like Kuvera, to control all passions like Varuna." So Yudhishthira went away. bowing to Bhishma and Drona, (II, 78). When Krshud took leave of Kunti, Kunti broke out in complaints, and especially recommended her ever to keep her eye on Sahadera. When Kunti beheld her sons clad in deer-skins, surrounded by rejoicing foes, she embraced them and broke out in complaints, asking why Krehna, who dwells in Dvaraka, and is without beginning and without end, does not deliver them from such woe. "O Sahadeva! ccase to go! thou art my dearest child, O son of Madri!" The Pandavas, having consoled her, set out for the woods, and Vidura led her to his house. The ladies of Dhrtarashtra's house wept, blaming the Kaurarae; and Dhrtarashtra, anxious, sent for Vidura (II. 79).—§ 306: Questioned by Dhrtarüshtra, Vidura described the attitude of the Pandavas, etc., when going away (a). The citizens cried out in grief, blaming the Kurus. Flashings of lightning and other terrible omens appeared. Narada appeared, surrounded by great rehis, and foreboded that on the fourteenth year thence the Kauravas would all be destroyed by Bhima and Arjuna. Then he disappeared through the skies. Duryodhana, Karna, and Cakuni offered the kingdom to Drona, who said that the Pandavas were incapable of being slain; that they would practise the brahmacarya for twelve years, and then return in anger; that he (Drona) would protect the Dhartarashtras, who had sought his protection, to the best of his ability; but that he would himself be slain by Dhrehtadyumna, whom Drupada had obtained (together with Krshnā) from the fire by the ascetic power of Yaja and Upayāja; "it is widely known in the world that Dhrehtadyumna will slay Drona." Dhrtaraehtra sent Vidura to bring the Pandavas back, or, if they did not come back, to send them off with respect, with their weapons, cars, and infantry, etc. (II, 80). — § 307: Sanjaya spoke to Dhrtarashtra about the perversity of his policy. Dhrtarashtra related that when Krshna was dragged into the court the grief was so great that the enraged brahmans did not that evening perform their agnihotra; he also related the omens which had appeared on the occasion, etc. (II, 81).

Anugita ("repetition of the Bhagavadgita"). § 10 (Parvas.): I. 2. 354 (parva . . adhyātmavācakam, i.e. Anugītāparvan). [Anugītāparvan] ("the section containing the repotition of the Bhagavadgītā," the 94th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Anugītā). § 782: Janamejaya said: When Krshna and Arjuna, after having slain their enemies, dwelt there in the palace, what conversation took place between them? Vaicampayana said: Arjuna, having recovered his kingdom, spent his time joyously in the company of Krshna in that beautiful palace. There they repaired to a particular part of the palaco with their friends and relatives. Arjuna asked Krshna to repeat to him what he had taught him before the battle [i.e. Bhagavadgītā], especially as he would soon repair to Dvaraka. Krshna is discontented because Arjuna cannot remember it; he would now, however, recite an old story upon the same topic. "There came a brahman from Svargaloka and was honoured by us; hear what he said, asked by us." The brahman said: There came a brahman Kācyapa, possessed of penance, etc., to some other brahman, who had become conversant with all the authorities on religion, etc., crowned with ascetic success (siddham), able to move everywhere at will (kramamanam), knowing the science of disappearing at will, roving with invisible Siddhas and celestial musicions (? cakradharaih, PCR.); Kūçyapa honoured him as his guru, and the brahman spoke to him about transmigration, comparing his own example; at last he had renounced the world and attained to his present success, and should not have to return to this world, but would come to "Brahman's eternal abode"; he promised to answer Kācyapa's questions (XIV, 16). Kṛshṇa said: Asked by Kāçyapa, the brahman discoursed on how Jiva casts off and then attains to a body, how Emancipation is achieved, and where acts do exist when Jiva becomes divested of body, etc.; how death is brought about; the happiness and misery of Jiva determined by acts (XIV, 17); how Jiva enters the womb; Brahmán first formed a body of his own, then he created Pradhana, the material cause (prakrtim) of all embodied creatures; indifference to pleasure and pain leads to the Supreme Seat (XIV, 18); who is said to be emancipated; on the science of yoga; how Jiva attains to emancipation.—Krehna said: Then the brahman disappeared; this discourse was, in fact, what thou (Arjuna) heardst on thy car; this is a great mystery even to the gods; at no time or place has this been heard by man in this world; by adhering to this religion, even those who are of sinful birth, women, vaiçyas, and çūdras, attain to the highest goal; yoga takes place in his case who devotes himself to its constant practice (nityayuktasya) for a period of six months (XIV, 19). In this connection the ancient narrative of a discourse between a married couple is cited: [Brāhmanagītā] (b) (XIV. 20-34). Asked by Arjuna about Brahman, Krehna recited the old story of the discourse between a preceptor and his disciple on this subject: Gurucish vasam vada (q). Asked by Arjuna, Krshna said that he is the preceptor, and the mind his pupil; "formerly, when the hour of battle came, this very religion was declared by me; and now, it is long since I saw my futher; I wish to see him again with thy leave."- Vaicampāyana said: Arjuna replied: "We shall go to-day from this town to Hastinapura and inform Yudhishthira" (XIV, 35-51).- § 783: Vaicampayana said: Krshna caused Daruka to yoke his car, and then set out for Hastinapura with Arjuna. Arjuna praised Krehna. "the soul of the universe, etc.," as he had learned from Narada, etc. (a), saying that Cri is always established in him, and mentioning Duryodhana, etc. (3). Arrived at Mastinapura, they entered the palace of Dhrtarashtra, where they saw Dhrtarashtra, etc. (7). Krshua passed the night in the apartments of Arjuna. At morning they proceeded to Yudhishthira, who sat with his ministers: Yudhishthira mentioned Vasudeva (his maternal uncle), etc. (8), and asked Krehna to think of Yudhishthira, etc. ( $\epsilon$ ), and to come back to his horse-sacrifice. Krshna took no gifts from him, took leave of Kunti (his maternal aunt), Vidura, etc., and then set out from Hastinapura with Subhadrā on the car, accompanied by Arjuna, Satyaki, etc. (5); then, having caused them to return, he with Daruka and Salyaki proceeded to the city of the Anarttas (XIV, 52).- § 784: Arjuna repeatedly embraced Krehna, etc. (omens). As he came to the desert, he beheld Utanka (b) (XIV, 53-58) .- § 785: Janamejaya said: What did Krshna next do, after having granted that boon to Utanka? Vaicampayana said: Having granted that boon to Utanka, Krshna, accompanied by Satyaki, proceeded to Drūrakā on his car, passing many lakes and rivers and forests and hills. He came there when the festival of Raivataka had begun; the Raivataka hill shone with great splendour (description; the trees looked like the kalpa-trees of Indra's garden; the mountain looked like Meru); gifts were ceaselessly being made to the distressed, or blind, or helpless. Krehna recounted the incidents of the great battle to his father (XIV, 59). Vasudova said: Tell me about the battle between the Pandavas and Bhishma, etc. (a). Vaicampayana said: Krshna narrated, also in the presence of his mother, how the Kaurava heroes had been slain in battle. Krehna's narrative of the battle  $(\beta)$ . Vaicampayana said: The Vrehnis became filled with grief (XIV, 60). Krehna had passed by the slaughter of Abhimanyu; Subhadra noticed it and fell down; Vasudeva then also fell down, and then asked Krehna to tell the whole truth (7). Krehna consoled him (8) (XIV, 61). Vasudeva and Krehna, etc. (e), made excellent obsequial offerings to Abhimanyu, and Krohna fed six millions of brahmans and gave away heaps of gold, etc. Also the Pandavas at Hastinapura were filled with grief for Abhimanyu; Uttarā totally abstained from all food, and her relatives feared for her embryo; Vyasa came and predicted to Prtha, Uttara, Arjuna, and Yudhishthira, that the son of Uttara would become a great prince, through the influence of Krehna and Vyasa; Abhimanyu had gone to the regions of the gods. Ariung became cheerful; the child in Uttara's womb grew like the moon in the bright fortnight; Vydes urged Yudhishthira to perform the horse-sacrifice, and disappeared; Yudhishthira set his mind on the journey for bringing wealth (XIV, 62). Janamejaya said: Having heard these words of Vyāsa, what steps were taken by Yudhishthira?-how did he succeed in obtaining the wealth of Marutta? Vaicampayana said: Having heard the words of Vyūsa, Yudhishthira summoned all his brothers, reminding them of the words of Vyasa, Bhishma, and Krehna about Marutta's gold; Bhimasena was of his opinion, saying that they must worship Civa and his followers; then the K.s, who protected the treasures, would certainly yield; Yudhishthira was pleased; the others, headed by Arjuna, approved. The Pandaras ordered their army to march under the nakshatra Dhruca (i.e. Rohint, Nil.), and on the day Dhruca (i.e. Sunday, Nil.), and set out, having worshipped Civa with modakas, frumenty, and cakes of ment, taking leave of Dhrtarashtra, etc. (5), and keeping Yuyutsu in the capital (XIV, 63). Then they set out (description); arrived at the spot, they pitched their camp, placing the brahmans and Agnivecya (i.e. Dhaumya, Nil.) in the van; then the Pandavas and the other kings, and the brahmans and priests, having performed propitiatory rites, and placing the king and his ministers in the middle, caused the camp to be pitched by laying out six roads and nine divisions; king Yudhishthira caused a separate uncampment to be made for the infuriated elephants; the brahmans declared this very day to be an auspicious one; on this day they would live upon water alone, and they should all fast; they passed the night on beds of kuçagrass, listening to the discourses of the learned brahmans. When the cloudless morning came, the brahmans told Yudhishthira (XIV, 64) to make offerings to Civa. Dhaumya performed the rites (description), and gave bali to the servants of Civa; offerings were next made to Kubera, Manibhadra, and to the other Y. and lords of Bh. (with kṛçaras, and meat, and nivapas mixed with sesame seeds); the king gave thousands of cows to the brahmans; then he ordered bali for the night-wandering Bh. Then the king, placing Vydea ahead, proceeded to the spot where the treasure was, once more worshipping Kubera, etc.  $(\eta)$ . Numerous costly vessels were dug out and placed in wooden chests, etc.; there were 60,000 camels, 120,000 horses, and 100,000 elephants, etc. (description). Once more worshipping Civa, they set out for Hastinapura with the permission of Vyasa, and placing Dhaumya in the van, marched a goyuta (four miles, PCR.) every day (XIV, 65). Meanwhile, Krehna with Pradyumna, etc. ( $\delta$ ), came to see Draupadi, etc. ( $\iota$ ), and was received by Dhrtarashtra, etc. (x). Uttara gave birth to Parikshit, who was born without life, afflicted with the Brahma weapon; Kunti, etc. ( $\lambda$ ), lamented, and Kunti asked Krshna, who came with Yuyudhana, to revive him and rescue Uttarā, etc. ( $\mu$ ), reminding him that Abhimanyu had said to Ultara that her son would learn the art of weapons, etc., by the Vrshnis and Andhakas; Krshna comforted her (XIV, 66). Then Subhadrā lamented ( $\nu$ ) (XIV, 67). Krshņa entered the lying-in room (description; with articles destructive of Ra.); Uttora lamented (5) (XIV, 68), and so did Kunti, etc. Krshna touched water and withdrew the Brahma weapon, and "as Kamea and Keçin have rightly been slain by me, etc." (tona satyona), he revived the child (XIV, 69). Parikshit illumined the lying-in room with his energy; Ra. fled or were destroyed; a voice in the sky applauded Krehna; the Brahma weapon returned to Brahman; at the command of Krehas the brahmans were made to utter benedictions;

Kunti, etc. (o), were glad and praised Krehns, and so did wrestlers, actors, astrologers, etc.; Krshna and the other Vrshai chiefs made precious gifts to the child, whom Krshaa called Parikshit (etymology). When he was a month old, the Pandavas came back with the wealth, and were received by those Prehais and the citizens; Vidura ordered various kinds of worship to be offered to the gods in their temples. etc.; with dancers and singers, the city resembled the mansion of Kubera, etc. (description) (XIV, 70). Krehna and his ministers went out to see the Pandavas, who entered the city together with the Vrehnis, and worshipped Dhrtarashtra, etc.  $(\pi)$ , and also Krehna, having heard how he had revived Parikshit; after a few days Vyūsa came and was worshipped by the Vrshnis and Andhakas, and he permitted Yudhishthira to perform the horse-sacrifice, "a purifier of all sinners." Yudhishthira asked Krshna to perform the sacrifice; but Krshna told Yudhishthira to appoint them to whatever tasks he likes; "when thou sacrificest, Bhimasena, etc. ( $\rho$ ), will be sacrificing" (XIV, 71). Yudhishthira asked Pyasa to cause him to be initiated; Vyūsa said that he and Paila and Yājūavalkya would perform the rites; the initiation would be performed on the day of full moon in the month of Caitra; "let sutas and brahmans well versed in the science of horses select a worthy horse"; all the articles were duly procured; Vyāsa ordained that the sphya and the kuroa should be made of gold; "let the horse be loosened to-day." Asked by Yudhishthira, Vyūsa ordained that Arjuna should protect the horse; Bhimasena the kingdom aided by Nakula; Sahadeva should attend to all the relatives invited (with the permission of Dhṛtarāshtra); Yudhishthira asked Arjuna to spare all hostile kings as much as possible and to invite them to the horsesacrifice (XIV, 72). Yudhishthira was initiated by the Rivijs (description); the horse was let loose. Arjuna with Gandiva followed the horse; all Mustinapura came out wanting to behold him; a disciple of Yajñavalkya followed him in order to perform auspicious rites for him; and also many brahmans and kehattriyas. During the horse's wanderings many great and wonderful battles were fought; the horse wandered over the whole earth; from the north it turned to the east: kings in myriads fought against Arjuna because they had lost their kinsmen on the field of Kurukshetra, and innumerable Kirdlas, Yavanas, Mlecchas, and Aryas; "I shall narrate only the principal battles" (XIV, 73). The Trigartas (the sons and grandsons of the slain) attacked Arjuna, who in vain asked them to forbear; the Trigarta king Suryavarman & Arjuna, who slew Süryavarman's younger brother Ketuvarman; Dhrtavarman & Arjuna, who was wounded in his hand and let fall Gandiva, but took it up again and slew eighteen warriors: the Trigartas fled and accepted Arjuna's dominion (XIV, 74). In Pragjyotisha, Bhagadatta's son king Vajradatta (description) attacked Arjuna on his elephant, but, after a fierce battle (XIV, 75) lasting three days, he on the fourth day had his elephant slain, and he promised to come to the horse-sacrifice (XIV, 76). Recollecting Jayadratha, the Saindhavas, mounted on cars, attacked Arjuna, who was on foot; a terrible wind began to blow, and Rahu swallowed up both the sun and the moon at the same time, etc.; Kaikka began to tremble; the seven R. and the other R. of heaven breathed hot sighs; Indra's bow appeared in the sky, and clouds poured flesh and blood on the earth; Gandles fell down; the gods, D.-r., Saptarchie, and B.-r. recited (jepuh) "victory" to Arjuna, who once more used his bow; the Saindhavas fled (XIV, 77), but once more rallied; Arjuna urged them to 59 [Anugitäparvan.]

surrender, but in vain, because they only thought of Javadratha: many were slain; then Duhcaki, taking her grandson, the son of Suratha [the son of Jayadratha], in her arms, repaired to Arjuna; Arjuna dropped his bow and asked about Suratha; she said that he had died from sorrow when he heard of Arjuna's arrival; she drew a parallel between Suratha's [orphan] son and Abhimanyu's [orphan] son Parikshit. Recollecting Dhrtarashtra and Gandhari, and consuring kehattriya practices and Duryodhana, Arjuna consoled and embraced her; Duhçalā asked her warriors to desist, and returned home. At last the horse arrived at Manipura (XIV, 78), where Babhruvahana, Arjuna's son by Citrangada, humbly approached Arjuna, together with a number of brahmans, bringing treasure in his van; Arjuna angrily blamed him for having neglected his duty as a kshattriya. Ulupi came from within the earth and beheld her [step-]son standing cheerless, and incited him to fight Arjuna. Which he did (description of his car); he even caused the sacrificial horse to be seized; gravely wounded, Arjuna praised his son highly; he cut off his standard, which was set with gold and resembled a golden palmyra, and then he slew his steeds; at last Ariuna fell down in a swoon, and so did Babhrurahana: Citrangada repaired to the battlefield weeping piteously (XIV, 79); she indulged in copious lamentations, lost her senses, and fell down on the earth; regaining consciousness and seeing Ulupi, she blamed her for having brought about Arjuna's slaughter by Babhruvahana, and asked her to revive him; "I do not grieve for my slain son, I only grieve for my husband"; otherwise she would sit in praya and die; the horse she had set free. Regaining consciousness Babhruvahana lamented pitcously, saying that now he had slain his father, he would wander over the earth, covering himself with his father's skin, or with the two halves of his head, as an expiation, or else he would die; he took an oath (touching water) that, if Arjuna was not revived, he would emaciate his own body, sitting on the field of battle; "I shall without doubt have to sink into hell; he who has slain a heroic kshattriya becomes purified by making a gift of 100 cows; I, who have slain my father, cannot be rescued." Ulapi thought of the gem that has the virtue of reviving a dead man; the gem, thus thought of, came there; she said that Arjuna had not been vanquished by Babhrurahana, but Ulupi had exhibited this illusion for the benefit of Arjuna. As soon as the prince had placed the gem on the breast of Arjuna the latter revived. Indra poured down celestial flowers, etc. Arjuna wondered why the two ladies were present, and why everything seemed to indicate grief, and asked Babhruvahana who told him to question Ulupi (XIV, 80). Asked by Arjuna, Ulupi recited the curse of the Vasus (approved by Ganga) because Arjuna had slain Bhishma in unfair fight (while he was engaged with Cikhandin and had ceased to fight); if Arjuna had died without having expiated his sin he would have fallen into Hell; hearing the curse of the Vasus, Ulupi had consulted her father, who prevailed upon the Vasus that Arjuna should be freed from their curses when he had been slain by Babhruvahana. Arjuna highly approved of Ulupi's action, and told Babhrurdhana to come with his mother and counsellors and officers to the horsesacrifice; Babhruvahana promised to come and to take upon himself the task of distributing food among the brahmans (dvijātipariveçakaķ). He asked Arjuna to pass the night in the city with his two wives; but Ariums was prevented by his vow of following the horse; he took leave and proceeded on his way (XIV, 81). The horse, having wandered over the whole earth, turned its face towards Hastinapura. At Rūjagrha, the Magadha king Meghasandhi, son of Sahadeva, attacked Arjuna, who was on foot, from his chariot; Meghasandhi was worsted, but spared and told to come to the horse-sacrifice. The horse then proceeded along the sea-coast through the country of the Vangas, Pundras, and Koçalas; in these countries Arjuna vanquished innumerable Miscoha armies (XIV, 82). Arjung proceeded towards the south. The horse came to Cuktimati, the beautiful city of the Cedie. Carabha, the son of Cicupala, fought Arjuna, and then worshipped him. Then the horse came to the Kaçis, Angas. Kocalas, Kiratas, and Tanganas; then to the Dacarnas. whose ruler Citrangada was vanquished by Arjuna; then to the dominions of the Niehada king, the son of Ekalavya. who was vanquished after a furious battle; then towards the southern ocean, where the Dravidas, Andhras, Mahishakas, and Kolvagireyas (B. Kollac) were subjugated; then to the Surdshtras, Gokarna, Prabhasa, and Draravati, where the Yadava youths were going to beat the horse, but were forbidden by King Ugrasena, who came to Arjuna with Vasudera. Then the horse proceeded along the coast of the western ocean to the prosperous country of the five rivers; then to the Gandharas, where a fierce battle ensued with the Gandhara king, the son of Cakuni (XIV, 83), who wanted to avenge the slaughter of Cakuni; many Gandharas were slain; at last the king, disregarding Arjuna's peaceful advice, fought alone; Arjuna shot off his headgear; then he and all the Gandharas fled; the mother of the king and all the aged ministers came out and forbade her son to fight; Arjuna said he had spared him for the sake of Gandhari and Dhrtarashtra, and told him to come to the horse-sacrifice (XIV, 84). The horse then turned towards the road that led to Hastinapura. As these tidings reached the Kuru court through the intelligence-bearers, Yudhishthira rejoiced, and on the twelfth day of the bright fortnight of Magha, under a favourable constellation, he summoned his brothers  $(\sigma)$ , and caused Bhima to let learned brahmans select a beautiful spot for the sacrificial compound (description). Then Bhima sent messengers to invite the kings of the earth; they brought gems, female slaves, horses, and woupons. All the foremost brahmans also came there with their disciples; likewise many dialecticians disputing with each other. All was made of gold. One hundred thousand brahmans were fed; many mountains of food, many large tanks of curds, and many lakes of ghee were seen there. The entire population of Jambudvipa was collected together (XIV, 85). Yudhishthira appointed Bhimasena to pay proper honours to the royal guests and to their attendants. Krehna came with the Vrehnie, Baladeva, etc. (7); Krehna told Yudhishthira about Arjuna (having heard it from a confidential agent of his in Dvaraka), that he had become very much emaciated, and that he was near at hand; he had warned against a carnage similar to that at the presenting of the Arghya, and he had especially recommended Babhruvahana (XIV, 86). Yudhishthira enquired of Krohna why Arjuna had to suffer such hardships in life; Krehna attributes it to the elevation of Arjuna's cheek-bones; Draupadi looked angrily at Krehna, who approved of her love. Bhimasena, etc., became gratified with Arjuna's triumphs. A messenger announced the arrival of Arjuna, and was presented with large gifts. On the second day Arjuna entered the city (description); people said that he had surpassed even Sagara. eto. Arjune saluted Yudhishthira, etc. (v). Babhrupahana came with his mother and entered the abode of Kunti (XIV, 87); Citrāngadā [and Ulapī] saluted Prthā, etc. (φ); Babhruvahana saluted Dhrtarashtra, etc. (χ); Krehna gave him an excellent chariot and steeds, and the others likewise gave him presents. On the third day Vyasa told Yudhishthira to commence the sacrifice, and to make the dakshina threefold. Yudhishthira underwent the diksha. The sacrifice was duly performed (description): 300 animals were tied to the stakes in addition to the horse; this sacrifice was honoured by the presence of D.-r., G., Aps., Kp., and Ku.; there were the disciples of Vyasa, etc. ( $\psi$ ) (XIV, 88); having cooked the other animals, the priests sacrificed the horse; after having cut it into pieces (B. cooking), they caused Draupadi to sit near it; then the brahmans cooked its marrow; Yudhishthira and his brothers smelled the sindestroying smoke of that marrow; the limbs (heart, tongue, breast, etc., Nil.) the sixteen rtvijs offered into the fire. Vyāsa and his disciples eulogised Yudhishthira, who gave 1,000 crores of golden nishkas to the brahmans, and the whole earth as dakshind to Vydsa; Vydsa returned it to him, telling him to give the purchasing value instead; Yudhishthira said that the dakshina for the horse-sacrifice is the earth, and that he would enter the woods and tell them to divide it into four parts, one for each of the four principal priests (? caturhotrapramanatah; PCR. "according to what is done in the caturhotra sacrifice"); his brothers and Draupadi approved of his words, as did also a voice in the sky; Vyāsa and Krehna prevailed upon him to retain the earth and give away millions of golden coins, trebling the dakshina for the horse-sacrifice; no other king would be able to accomplish what Yudhishthira thus did after the manner of Marutta; Vyāsa gave the wealth (the price of the earth) to the officiating priests, in four parts, and they distributed it among the brahmans, who were also permitted to take the ornaments of gold, etc.; the remaining wealth was allotted to kshattriyas, Vaiçyas, Çadras, and Mleschas. Vyūsa gave away his own share to Kunti, who devoted it to various meritorious acts. Yudhishthira performed the final sacrificial bath, and dismissed the kings, etc. (w), with proper honours and gifts. There were oceans of wine of different kinds, etc. (description); people of different realms speak of this sacrifice to this day. Then Yudhishthira entered his capital (XIV, 89).- § 786: Janamejaya said: Tell me of any wonderful incident that occurred in the sacrifice of my grandfather. Vaicampayana related how a mongoose disparaged the sacrifice: Nakulākhyāna (b); then the mongoose disappeared, and the brahmans returned home. "Thou shouldst not think highly of sacrifice; millions of R. have ascended to Heaven with the sole aid of their penances; abstention from injury, contentment, proper conduct, sincerity, penances, selfrestraint, truthfulness, and gifts are each equal in point of merit to sacrifice" (XIV, 90). Seeing that kings are given to sacrifice, M.-r. to penance, and learned brahmans to tranquillity, etc., Janamejaya cannot but think that nothing can be compared with the result of sacrifices, since Indra obtained the sovereignty over the gods by his many sacrifices; and when Yudhishthira, Bhima, and Arjuna resembled Indra. "why did then that mongoose depreciate Yudhishthira's horse-sacrifice?" Vaicampayana said: Formerly, when Indra was performing a sacrifice the R. felt compassion on the animals, and said to Indra that the slaughter of animals in sacrifices had not been ordained; according to the [true] scriptural ordinances the sacrifice should be performed with seeds of grain which had been kept for three years. As Indra did not accept their words, a great dispute arose; they referred to the Cedi king Vasu, who declared that a sacrifice may be performed with whichever of the two kinds of objects is ready; he therefore had to enter Rasatala; therefore no one should singly be relied upon, when a doubt arises, except Brahmán; gifts made by a sinful person and with wealth acquired by unrighteous means became lost; while men possessing the wealth of penances acquired great merit and proceeded to Heaven, by giving away, to the best of their ability, grains of corn, or roots, etc., or water or The same results are also won by compassion, brahmacarya, truthfulness, kindness, fortitude, and forgiveness, which are the eternal foundations of eternal righteousness; having made gifts of articles lawfully acquired, Viçvamitra, etc. (a), have attained to high success; those amongst brahmans, kehattriyas, vaicyas, and Cudras, who betake themselves to penances, and who purify themselves by gifts and other acts of righteousness, proceed to Heaven (XIV, 91). Janamejaya said: If Heaven is the result of wealth acquired by lawful means, please tell me all about it; thou hast told me the great result that accrued to the brahman living by gleaning grains from his gift of powdered barley. Vaicampāyana cited the old narrative of what occurred in former days at the great sacrifice of Agastya (e).—Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampayana explained that the mongoose (v. Nakulākhyāna) with a golden head was Dharma, who had been cursed by P., but freed from his curse by disparaging himself in the form of Yudhishthira; "the mongoose disappeared there in our very sight" (XIV, 92).

[Anukramanikā-parvan], the first of the minor parvans (cf. Anukramani). § 1: The Süta Ugraçravas (Sauti), son of Lomaharshana, had heard the Mahābhārata, which had been composed by Vyāsa, recited—under the direction of Dvaipāyana (i.e. Vyāsa) himself—by Vaiçampāyana, disciple of Vyāsa, at the serpent-sacrifice of king Janamejaya, son of Parikshit; he had thereupon undertaken a pilgrimage to the tīrthas (holy places) and visited Samantapañcaka (b); thence he came to the twelve years' sattra (long sacrifice) of Caunaka in the Naimisha forest, where he related the Mahābhārata, (§ 2) beginning with the adoration of Vishnu identified with the Absolute (Brahman), and (§ 3) a brief exposition of the creation and succession of beings from the Absolute through Brahmán, the 21 Prajapatis (a), gods, etc. ( $\beta$ ), down to the families of the Kurus, etc. ( $\gamma$ ), mentioned in the poem,-§ 4: The Mahābhārata contains an enlarged and an abridged form; some make it begin with Manu (i.e. I, 75, 18 = 3143; otherwise Nil.), some with Astika (i.e. I, 13, 1 = 1020), and some with Uparicara (i.e. I, 63, 1 = 2334) (v. 52). Vyāsa had composed the Mahābhārata in a moment, and, at the counsel of Brahman, had Ganeça to write it down as fast as he dictated to him. (An enumeration of the first sixteen books is contained in v. 88-91.) The portion destined for men (100,000 clokes out of six millions) he taught Vaicampayana, who narrated it in the intervals between the parts of the serpent-sacrifice of Janamejaya, first giving a survey of the principal contents (a), partly in the form of a conversation between Dhrtarashtra and Sanjaya.—§ 5: Sanjaya, in order to console Dhrtarashtra, first enumerated 24 great kings (a), who were formerly mentioned by Nārada to Caivya (B. Cvaitya) whon lamenting the loss of a son, and thereupon (§ 6) 66 others (a), who had all died .- § 7: He, who hears or reads the Mahabharata, is purified from the most atrocious sins (261 ff. = 254 ff.).

[Apaddharmaparvan] ("the section relating to the duties in cases of need," the 89th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Apaddharma). § 642: Yudhishthira enquired of Bhishma what should be done by a weak and timid king, as also by one that is in great distress. Bhishma's answer recommending peace and even the surrender of territory. The king should never surrender his person as long as he can avoid doing so. If the invading enemy be righteous, the assailed king should make peace; if otherwise, the assailed should fight bravely and fall (XII, 131). How a brahman should subsist in times of calamity. Bhishma began his exposition of the moral standard of unlucky times; in times of calamity the king may take from the wicked and give it to the good; at such times censurable acts do not become censurable; the king should never oppress brahmans, even at such times. Slander should be avoided. The tests of righteousness; difficulty in finding the course of duty. "Some regard ancient usage as the highest test of righteousness; they that are in favour of the conduct of Cankha towards Likhita do not hold this opinion" (XII. 132). How a king should fill his treasury. The king [Apaddharmaparvan.]

should establish laws which he should never transgress (XII. 133). . The two duties of a kahattriya are the acquisition of religious merit and of wealth. The advantages of Power (XII, 134).- § 643: The old story of a robber who having in this world been observant of restraint did not meet with destruction in the next: Kayavya-carita (b) (XII, 135).- § 644: What wealth should not be taken by the king (XII, 136) .- § 645: Who enjoy happiness: Cākulopākhyāna (b) (XII, 137).—§ 646. How a king should behave who is weak and threatened on all sides by powerful focs: the old story of the mouse, the cat, the owl. the mongoose, and the hunter, i.e. Mārjūra-mūshikasamvāda (b). The moral of the story (XII, 138).- § 647: Bhishma related the conversation between the bird Pujani and king Brahmadatta, i.e. Brahmadatta-Pūjanī-samvāda (b) (XII, 139).—§ 648: How a king should behave when there is a general decadence of righteousness: the old story of the discourse between Bhāradvāja and king Catrunjaya. i.e. Kanikopadeça (b) (XII, 140).—§ 649: How a brahman should live when there is terrible distress around. Bhishma said that the Krta, etc. (a), are all dependent on the king's conduct, citing the old story of the discourse between Vicramitra and the Candala in a hamlet inhabited by Candalas. Towards the end of Treta and the beginning of Drapara a frightful drought occurred extending over twelve years; the planet Brhaspati began to move in a retrograde course. and Soma receded towards the south, etc. (description); the brahmans abstained from sacrifices and recitations of the Vedas. and no longer uttered vashats, etc.; the very Rehis, giving up their vows, began to wander hither and thither. M.-r. Victamitra, leaving his wife and son, wandered fireless and homeless, and regardless of food, clean and unclean. One day he came upon a hamlet, in the midst of a forest, inhabited by cruel hunters, etc. (description of a Candala hamlet). Viçvāmitra, in rage of hunger, wanted to steal a dog's haunch ("theft is allowable in a season of distress even for an eminent person; . . . in the first place one should steal from a low person . . . "). He was discovered and harshly addressed by the owner; but when the Candala learned who he was he addressed him respectfully, and dissuaded him from eating dog's ment, as the dog is less clean than a jackal, and the haunch of a dog is much worse than other parts of his body; "only the five kinds of five-clawed animals are clean food for brahmans and kshattriyas and vaicyas, as laid down in the scriptures" (yathāçāstram). Viçiāmitra said that it is the duty of the brahmans to behave like Agni (as it is the duty of the kshattriyas to behave like Indra), that the Vedas are fire, and that fire at times becomes a consumer of everything: "life is better than death; if living one may acquire virtue"; he mentioned that Agastya, when hungry, ate up the Asura Vatapi ("a man who is a Rshi cannot do what is sinful"). Notwithstanding the warnings of the Candala, Viccamitra took away that haunch of dog's meat into the woods and wished to eat it with his wife, having gratified the gods and the Pitrs; igniting a fire according to the Brahma rites and cooking a caru according to the Aindragneya rites, dividing the caru into due portions, he invoked the gods, including Indra. Meanwhile Indra began to pour rain copiously. Viçvamitra, having completed the rites, himself ate that meat. Afterwards he destroyed all his sins by his penances and acquired the most wonderful success (XII 141).- 650: Yudhishthira was distressed at the possibility of such acts of impiety being mentioned as a duty. Bhishma said that kings should gather wisdom from various sources, and not from the Vedas alone. Those who blame the injunctions of the scriptures, etc., are hucksters in learning and Rakshasas among men; it has been heard by us that the texts of morality cannot be understood solely by discussion or by one's own intellect; Indra has said that this is the opinion of Brhaspati; . . . in days of old Ucanas told the Daiteyas this truth, that scriptures are no scriptures if they cannot stand the test of reason; . . . the sin of killing a person is equal to the sin of not killing one that deserves to be killed. Indra has said that in times of distress the great duty of a king is chastising the wicked and protecting the good (XII, 142).- § 651: Yudhishthira enquired after the merits of protecting suppliants. Bhishma, reminded of Cibi, etc., told the story (that purifies the heart from every sin) that Bhargava (i.e. Rama, PCR.) had recited to king Mucukunda, how a pigeon won success (siddhi), i.e. Kapota-lubdhaka-samvada (b) (XII, 143-149). - § 652: Requested by Yudhishthira about how a person can be purified after having committed sin from want of judgment, Bhishma related the old tale, applauded by R., of what the brahman Indrota Caunaka said to Janamejaya, i.e. Indrota-Pārīkshitīya (b) (XII, 150-152).- § 653: Asked by Yudhishthira if he had ever seen or heard of any mortal restored to life after having succumbed to death, Bhishma related the story of the discourse between a vulture and a jackal as it had happened of old in the forest of Naimisha, i.e. Grdhra-gomāyu-samvāda (b) (XII, 153).— § 654: Yudhishthira asked Bhishma as to how a weak king who incurs the wrath of a powerful one should behave in the hour of danger. Bhishma told the story of the discourse between Parana and the calmali, who, having dared the Wind-god, saved himself by causing his branches to be lopped off: Pavana-çalmali-samvada (b). "One should overlook the wrongs inflicted by a person of superior strength, and even consider them like the acts of a child, an idiot, or one that is blind or deaf. The eighteen akshauhinis were not equal in might to Arjuna" (XII, 154-157).- § 655: Covetousness is the cause of sin; it is not known in its real nature by D., G., As., M.-U., etc. (XII, 158). Discourse on ignorance; it has its origin in covetousness; Janaka, etc. (a), acquired heaven in consequence of their having repressed covetousness (XII, 159). The moral laws laid down by M.-r. are many; the highest among them all is self-restraint; it surpasses charity and sacrifice and study of the Vedas (XII, 160). Penance (tapas) is the root of everything; by penance Prajapati created the universe. etc., and R. acquired the Vodas and acquired their sixfold divine attributes (aiçvaryam); renunciation (samnydsah) constitutes the highest penance (XII, 161). Discourse on Truth and its indications; it is applauded by brahmans, R., and P.; it is yoga, it is Brahmán, sacrifice, etc.; it has been found to weigh heavier than 1,000 horsesacrifices (XII, 162). Discourse on the thirteen vices that are powerful foes of all; all these thirteen faults stained the sons of Dhrtarashtra (XII, 163). The characteristics of malevolent persons (XII, 164). How brahmans should be provided for. At the end of every year one should perform the Vaiçvanara sacrifice (ishtim Vaiçvanarim). The practice of an act laid down in an alternative is not destructive of virtue: fearing death, V.-D., Sa., the brahmans, and M.-r. make use of the alternative instead of the principal rule in seasons of distress. The five kinds of falsehood that are not sinful. The three sins that cannot be expiated. Acts that are never sinful ("amrta, if extracted from poison, can be quaffed"). Different kinds of expiation for different kinds of sin (XII, 165).- 656: Questioned by Nakula, Bhishma related Khadgotpattikathana (q.v.) (XII, 166).- § 657: When Bhishma became silent Yudhishthira returned home. Yudhishthira's question to Vidura and his own brothers about the three things (trivaras, i.e. virtue, wealth, and desire). Vidura assigned precedence to virtue. Arjuna assigned precedence to wealth (or profit). Nakula and Sahadeva assigned the precedence to both wealth and virtue. Bhimasena assigns precedence to desire ("it is from desire that R. devote themselves to penances"). Yudhishthira applauded withdrawal from the three things, recommending emancipation (mokeha) ("we do not know. however, what emancipation is") or extinction (nirvana), and quoted Brahmán.—All of them were filled with delight and applauded Yudhishthira, who once more addressed Bhishma (XII, 167).- § 658: Asked by Yudhishthira with whom friendship is delightful, Bhishma, having also stated with whom friendship should be avoided, related an old story that had occurred in the country of the Mlecchas, that lies to the north, about an ungrateful person, i.e. Krtaghnopākhyāna (b). Bhīshma's observations on ingratitude (XII, 168-173).

Apavarga: XII, 1673 (°bhūtānām paratahethitah, i.e. Krehna). Apavopākhyāna ("episode relating to Apava, i.e. Vasishtha"). § 164 (cf. Bhishmotp.): Ganga fully related to Cantanu the reason why the Brahmarshi Vasishtha (or Apara), the son of Varuna, had cursed the Vasus. When the Vasue, Prthu (or Dhara), etc., were wandering with their wives in the wood near Vasishtha's hermitage, frequented by the devarshis, Dyaus was prevailed upon by his wife (assisted by his brothers), in the interest of her friend Jitavati, daughter of Uçinara, to steal Vasishtha's homadhenu [Nandini] (daughter of Kacyapa and Surabhi, the daughter of Daksha), by drinking whose milk one could remain in unchanged youth for 1,000 years. Vasishtha, however, was prevailed upon to let among them Dyaus alone (who was to be conversant with all gastras, etc.) dwell on earth for a long time without marrying. Then Ganga, taking with her the child (Gangeya or Devarrata, i.e. Bhishma), went away, and Cantanu returned to his capital -"I shall now recount the virtues of the Bharata Çantanu, whose splendid story is called the Mahābhārata" (1, 99). [Araneyaparvan] ("the section relating to the wood for producing fire by friction," the 51st of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. = ch. III, 311-315). § 548: Asked by Janamejaya, Vaicampayana related what the Pandavas did after having rescued Krshnā (from Jayadratha). The Pandavas left Kamyaka and returned to Dvaitavana with Krehna. Once a deer carried off a brahman's arani and mantha, was pursued by the Pandavas, and suddenly became invisible. Bhima repented that he had not slain the pratikamin, Arjuna that he had not slain Karna, and Sahadeva that he had not slain Cakuni. Nakula, Sahadeva, Arjuna, and Bhīma were successively sent to fetch water, but caused to drop down dead by a Yaksha. At last Yudhishthira himself went, answered thirty-four questions put by the Yaksha, chose that Nakula should be revived, rescued all his brothers, learnt that the Yaksha was his father Dharma (c), was granted the boon that the brahman would recover his arani and mantha, that the Pandavas would manage to live the thirteenth year unrecognized in Virāţa's kingdom, and that Yudhishthira (who was born of Dharma, as Vidura of a portion of Dharma) should overcome covetousness, etc. The Pandavas asked permission of the brahmans to live the thirteenth year in concealment from the Dhartarashtras, Duryodhana, etc., and Karna and Saubala. Dhaumya, etc., consoled Yudhishthira: "Even the gods (Indra, d; Vishņu, e; Agni, f; Aurva, g; Vivasvat, h) have wandered in disguise for the purpose of overcoming foes." The brahmans (yatis, munis) went back to their homes, and the Pandavas and Dhaumya set out with Krshnā, and the next day proceeded for a kroça, and then sat down in order to take counsel of each other.

Aranyaka<sup>2</sup> – Āranyakaparvan. § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 319 (parva).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 417 (atah param trtīyan tu jūsyam Āranyakam mahat = Vanaparvan), 478 (stadūranyakam parva trtīyam parikīrtitam = Vanaparvan).—§ 596 (Pratijūūp.): VII, 81, 2905 (varam Āranyake dattam, all. to Kairāṭaparvan, Ā. therefore is = Vanaparvan).—§ 795c (Mahābhārata): XVIII, 6ρ, 268 (when one has arrived at the Ā. one should feed the foremost bruhmans with roots and fruits).

Aranyakaparvan ("section relating to the forest life of the Pandavas," the 30th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 308: The Pandavas set out from Hastinapura through the Vardhamana gate with their weapons, accompanied by Krehna, in a northerly direction. Indrasona and other servants, 14 in number (see BR. s.v. pari; Nil. and PCR. take it to be = 15), with their wives, followed them on swift cars. The citizens wished to leave the town and follow them, but were prevailed upon by Yudhishthira to return and cherish Bhishma, Dhrtarashtra, Vidura, Kunti, etc. About the close of the day the Pandavas reached the banian Pramana on the banks of the Ganga, purified themselves by touching the water, and passed the night there, taking water alone as their sole sustenance, in the company of brahmans with and without fire, who had followed them (III, 1). When the day broke in, Yudhishthira tried to prevail upon the brahmans to leave him, in order that they might not undorgo sufferings, living on fruits, roots, and deer. But they declared that they would follow him. themselves providing their own food. - § 309: Then a learned brahman, Çaunaka, versed in Sankhya and Yoga, quoting the clokas of Janaka, told Yudhishthira not only to retire from the world, but also in his heart not to mind the loss of his wealth. Yudhishthira declared that it was not from avarice, but only because he could no more support the brahmans, that he regretted his wealth; "nobody should cook his food for himself alone, and nobody should slay an animal without devoting it to the gods, the pitrs, and guests, nor should one eat of that food which had not been duly dedicated to the gods and the pitrs." Caunaka said that sacrifices, study, gifts, and penance pave the way to the world of the Pitrs—truth, forgiveness, subduing the senses. and renunciation of desire to the heaven of the gods, and they should be practised without reference to self (abhimana). It was by their wealth of yoga that the Rudras, Sadhyas, Adityas, Vasus, and Agrine rule over the creatures. So Yudhishthira, who had already achieved success as to his indebtedness towards his ancestors and as to sacrifices, now ought to seek success in yoga and in ascetic austerities; then he would be able to realize all his wishes (III, 2). - § 310: Yudhishthira then, having consulted Dhaumya, was taught by him (as Bhīma, Kūrtavīrya, Vainya, and Nahusha had by ascetic meditation delivered the people from affliction) 108 names of Surya (a), [originally] proclaimed by Svayambhū (i.e. Brahmán) * (the Sun). Yudhishthira, touching the water of Ganga, with his senses under control, and feeding upon air alone, stood engaged in prantyama, and began a hymn in praise of Sarya (b) (the Sun). The Sun then showed himself to Yudhishthira and gave him a copper vessel, saying that if Pañodli (i.e. Krshnā) kept this vessel fruits, roots, meat, and vegetables, cooked in their kitchen, would be inexhaustible for twelve years. Then the god vanished. Rising from the water, Yudhishthira took hold of Dhaumya's feet and embraced his brothers. The clean food that was dressed, however little, became inexhaustible, and only after the brahmans, the brothers, Yudhishthira, and at last Krshna had eaten the day's food became exhausted. Having then performed sacrifices, they set out for the Kamyaka wood, accompanied by Dhaumya and the brahmans (III, 3) .- § 311: Dhrtarashtra asked Vidura what they should do to secure the good-will of the citizens. Vidura said that he must give back to the Pāṇḍavas all that had been theirs, let Duryodhana, Çakuni, and Karna wait upon them, and Duhçasana ask their forgiveness in open court, and if Duryodhana would not consent to reign in peace jointly with Yudhishthira, he. ought to abandon him and let Yudhishthira reign alone. Dhrtarashtra did not approve, and saying "stay or go, as thou listest," he suddenly rose and went away, and Vidura went away to the Pandavas (III, 4).—§ 312: Starting from the Ganga, the Pandavas went to Kurukshetra, performed ablutions in the Sarasvati, Drçadvati, and Yamuna, and, travelling in a westerly direction, they arrived at the Kāmyaka wood on the Sarasvatī. There Vidura came to them in a single car. When seeing him, Yudhishthira was afraid that he brought an invitation to a new match at dice with Cakuni about their weapons. Vidura told them that he had been forsaken by Dhrtarashtra, and gave them advice how to secure adherents (III, 5).—§ 313: After Vidura had gone Dhrtardshtra repented and fell down senseless, and having regained consciousness caused Sanjaya to bring Vidura back (III, 6). Duryodhana, being afraid because Vidura had returned, held counsel with Cakuni, Karna, and Duhcasana. who were of opinion that the Pandavas would remain the promised space of time in the wood. As Duryodhana, however, was not contented, Karna proposed to set out and slay them. When they had gone out Krehna Dvaipayana came upon them and commanded them to desist, and then appeared before Dhrtardshtra (III, 7). Vydsa warned Dhrtardshtra against permitting Duryodhana to try to slay the Pandavas (III, 8).—§ 314: As Dhrtardshira said he was unable to cast off his senseless son, Vydsa told him: One day, when Indra saw Surabhi weeping in heaven, and asked her why she wept, she told him that one of her offspring (a cow) was exceedingly harassed by a husbandman; and although she had 1,000 offspring, and her affections flowed equally towards , all, yet she felt greater compassion for the weak. Indra poured down a shower of rain and caused obstruction to the husbandman's work. "So I feel anxious regarding the Pandavas in distress; let thy affections be greater towards [Arghāharaṇaparvan] ("on the handing over of the gift of honour," the 26th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 289: On the abhishecaniya day maharshis and Nārāda entered the antarvedi and sat down together with the rājarshis engaged in various topics of conversation and dispute. No gadra was then near the antarvedi, nor anybody without vows (arratin). Narada sat there with feelings of awe, remembering the words he had heard of old in the mansion of Brahman regarding the incarnation of the deities, and knowing that Krshna was the incarnation of Narayana and would himself destroy all these assembled kshattriyas. Bhīshma then proposed to Yudhishthira that arghas should be offered to the kings, and first to him who was the foremost. As Bhishma declared Krshna to be foremost, he caused Sahadeva to present the first argha to Krshna, which filled the Codi king Çiçupāla with envy (II, 36). Cicupāla gravely censures Bhishma, Yudhishthira, and Krshna (saying that he was a servant and cowherd and no king, and speaking depreciatingly of his exploits), and accompanied by the kings left the assembly (II, 37). Yudhishthira ran after Cicupāla and spoke sweetly to him in order to conciliate him; Bhishma maintained the fitness of giving Krshna the first argha (II, 38). Sahadova and Narada declared it to be highly improper not to worship Krshna. Sunitha (i.e. Cicupala) stirred the kings up in order to obstruct the completion of the sacrifice (II, 39).

Arjuna Kārtavīrya, Haihaya king. § 169 (Paraçu-Rāma): I, 104, 4173 (Haihayādhipatih; killed by Paraçu-Rāma).— § 376 (Tīrthay.): III, 85, 8273 (Kārtavīryārjuno yathā).— § 394 (Tīrthay.): III, 115: The Haihaya king Arjuna had 1,000 arms, and, by the favour of Dattātreya, he had obtained a golden vimāna that could proceed everywhere without obstruction, and ruled over all beings (Bhūtān!). The gods and rshis asked Vishnu to kill him. On his celestial vimāna,

Arjuna affronted Indra, when he was sporting with Caci. After having held a consultation with Indra, Vishnu went to his hermitage Badari (for continuation v. Jamadagni), 10135 (Haihayadhipatih), 10140.- § 397 (Jamadagni): III, 116: Once, when the sons of Jamadagni had gone out, Arjuna Kārtavīrya, the lord of the country near the sea-shore (Anapapatih), came to the hermitage, and, being received hospitably by Renuka (the wife of Jamadagni), carried off the calf of the homadhenu and pulled down the trees. As Jamadagni told Rāma this, Rāma rushed towards Arjuna, and cut down his 1,000 arms with his arrows, and killed him. The heirs of Arjuna came while Rama was away, and shot Jamadagni to death with their arrows. When they had gone away Rāma returned to the hermitage (III, 116), 10195 .-§ 398 (Paruça-Rāma): III, 117: After having lamented for and cremated his father, Rama vowed the slaughter of the entire kshattriya caste, killed Kārtavīrya's sons, etc.—§ 638b (Ramop.): XII, 49: Meanwhile the virtuous kehattriya, the Haihaya king Arjuna Kartavirya, with 1,000 arms through the grace of Dattatreya, having subjugated the whole earth with its mountains and seven islands, became a powerful emperor, and gave away the earth to the brahmans in a horse-sacrifice. Solicited by Agni, he once gave alms to that deity, who sprung from the point of his shaft, i.e. Agni burnt villages, etc., and he burnt also the retreat of Apava (= Vasishtha), who cursed Arjuna, saying that Rāma should lop off his arms. Always devoted to peace, always regardful of brahmans, etc., Arjuna did not mind that curse. His sons, always haughty and cruel, seized and brought away the calf of Jamadagni's homa-cow, without the knowledge of Arjuna. Rama lopped off the arms of Arjuna and brought back the calf; the sons of Arjuna came and slew Jamadagni in the absence of Rāma, who vowed to free the earth of kshattriyas, and slaughtered all the sons and grandsons of Arjuna, and 1,000 Haihayas, and freed the earth of all kshattriyas, etc., 1750 (Krtavīryūtmajo, Haihayādhipah), 1757, 1758, 1759, 1763, 1764 (°eya sutāh).-§ 772b (Pavanārjunas.): XIII, 153ff: The Haihaya king Arjuna Kartavirya with 1,000 arms became the lord of this whole world (i.e. the earth), residing in Mahishmati; he gave large gifts to Dattatreya, who granted him four boons: that he should have 1,000 arms in battle, but only two at home; that he should subjugate the whole earth righteously; and reign with vigilance; and that whenever he might happen to go wrong, the righteous should set him right. A. now regarded himself as having no equal. An invisible voice said that the brahman is superior to the kshattriya; A. maintained that the brahmans take refuge with the kshattriyas; "I shall bring the skin-clad brahmans under my sway." Vāyu (Wind) warned .1., addressing him from the air, etc. At last Arjuna praised the brahmans, mentioning Dattatreya. Vayu told him always to protect them; "a terrible danger threatens thee from the Bhrgus; that will take place after a time," 7186 (Arjunasya samvādam Pavanasya ca), (7199), 7207, (7211); 154, 7225; 157, 7291, 7305; 158, 7326, 7349, (7350).—§ 782c (Brāhmaṇagītā): XIV, 29, 818, (822): The 1,000 armed king Kartaviryarjuna conquored the whole earth with his bow; once he showered hundreds of arrows at the ocean. The ocean asked him to desist, as he injured the creatures in the waters; Arjuna asked if there existed any bowman who was his equal in shooting. The Ocean named Rāma Jāmadagnya. Arjuna came and began to trouble him; Rāma burnt his troops and prostrated him with his battleaxe and drove away his kinsmen to the mountain fastnesses; their progeny became Vrshalas owing to their inability to find brahmans: so the Dravidas, etc. Cf. After Pandu had been cursed, that he should have no progeny, he caused Dharma to procreate Yudhishthira in Kuntī, then Vayu to procreate Bhimasena, and then Indra to procreate Arjuna .-§ 190d (Pandavotp.): I, 123: In order to propitiate Indra (before summoning him), Pandu, took counsel with the maharshis, and caused Kunti to observe an auspicious vow for a full year, while he himself began to stand upon one leg, etc. After the birth of A, a bodyless voice said that he should subjugate the Madras, the Kurus, the Somakas, the Codis, Kūcis, and Karūshas, and satiate Haryavāhana (Fire) in the Khāndava wood with the fat of all beings, and, with his brothers, perform three sacrifices; in battle he would gratify Cankara, and receive from him the Paçupata weapon, and, at the command of Indra, slay the Nivātakavacas, and acquire all sorts of celestial weapons: 4791, 4795.- § 191: On hearing this voice, the ascetics dwelling on Catagraga became exceedingly glad. There was heard the sound of dundubhis, and flowers were showered down. The various tribes of celestials (devaganah), etc. (a), came there (enumeration, among others, of Devagandharvas, Apsarases, the twelve Adityas, the Rudras, the Vainateyas). Then the Acvins procreated the twins Nakula and Sahadeva in Madri.-§ 192 (Pandavotp.): I, 124, 4854 (the third son of Kuntī). Having been procreated on Catacringa in behalf of Pandu by the gods Dharma (Yudhishthira), Vayu (Bhimasena), Indra (Arjuna; the mother of these three was Kunti), and the Acvins (Nakula and Sahadeva, who were twins and sons of Madri) in Pandu's wives Kunti and Madri, the five Pandavas after the death of Panda were brought to Hästinapura and educated by Drona, under the supervision of Bhishma. Their cousins (the sons of Dhrtarashtra) hated them, especially Duryodhana, who tried to murder Bhimasena and later on all the Pandavas and Kunti (Madri had burnt herself with the corpse of Pandu), and Karna hated Arjuna from jealousy.—§ 203b (cf. Drona): I, 132: One day Drona asked his pupils to promise to accomplish what he had on his heart; only Arjuna promised it. Arjuna became the foremost of all his fellow-pupils. Drona gave every one of his pupils a narrow-mouthed vessel (kamandalu) for fetching water, in order that much time might be spent in filling it, but to Acvatthaman he gave a broad-mouthed vessel (kumbha), and in the intervals so gained he used to instruct his son in several superior methods; but Arjuna filled the vessel by means of the Varuna weapon, and used to come at the same time as Acvatthaman. Drona told the cook never to give Arjuna his food in the dark, but not to tell him that it was he (Drona) that had ordered this. One day a wind put the lamp out when Arjuna was taking his food; but his hand went up to his mouth from habit. His attention being thus called to the force of habit, Arjuna practised with his bow in the night, and Drong promised him that there should not be a bowman equal to him in the world. He taught him also to fight on horseback, etc., with the mace, etc.: 5217, 5218, 5224, 5225, 5230, 5232, 5233, 5238.—§ 204 (Ekalavya): I, 132, 5252 (Drona took from Ekalavya as his fee the thumb of his right hand in order that he might not surpass Arjuna).—§ 205e (cf. Drona): I, 132, 5273, 5274: Arjuna excelled everyone in every respect, and alone became an atiratha ("a charioteer capable of fighting at one time with 60,000 foes," PCR.).-§ 206 (Drona): I, 132f. 5293, 5296. One day Drona caused an artificial bird to be placed on the top of a tree, and first repeatedly asked Yudhishthira to tell what he did see, while aiming at the bird. He answered that he saw the tree, Drona, his brothers, and the bird. Drona reproachfully told him to stand apart. Then Drona repeated the experiment with his other pupils, with the same result (ch. 132). Arjuna's turn came; he said first that he saw only the vulture, and then that he saw only its head, and, when Drona gave the order, he struck off its head with his shaft (1, 133).—§ 207 (do.): I, 133: Arjuna rescued the life of Drona by shooting with five arrows an alligator in the Ganga that had seized his thigh. Drona gave him the weapon Brahmaçiras on the condition that he should not use it against a human foe, as it might burn the whole universe. - § 208b (cf. Astradurgana): I, 135: Then Arjuna appeared, while Kunti wept with joy, and Dhrtarashtra learned from Vidura who it was. By the Agneya weapon Arjuna created fire, by the Vāruna water, by the Vāyavya air, by the Pārjanya clouds; by means of the Parvata a mountain came into being (v. 5366, read with V. "abhavadgirih" or with B. "asrjadgirin"), and by the Antardhana weapon it again disappeared, etc.; he at one time shot five shafts together into the mouth of a moving iron boar, and discharged twenty-one arrows into the hollow of a cow's horn hung up in a rope and swaying to and fro (v. 5370, instead of "bale" read with B. and V. "cale") .- § 208 (Astradargana): I, 137, 5440, 5442: At the show of arms Karna in vain challenged Arjuna. - § 209 (Drupadaçāsana): I, 138, 5484, 5492, 5499, 5500, 5501. Arjuna helped Drona to subjugate Drupada, which favour Drona had asked as his fee.-§ 210c (cf. Sambhavaparvan): I, 139: Drona taught Arjuna Brahmaçiras (that he had learnt from Agnireça, the disciple of Agastya), on the condition that he should not hurl it at any human being (cf. § 207), and obtained from him as his fee the promise that he would fight with him [in the great battle]. Then Arjuna went away to the northern regiou.—§ 211 (Sambhavap.): I, 139, 5537, 5538. Headed by Arjuna, the Pandavas in war slew Sauvīra, who had performed a three years' sacrifice at the inroad of the Gandharvas. The Yavana king, whom even Pandu had failed to subject, was subdued by Arjuna; as was also the Sauvīra Vitula (B. Vipula), who had always shown a disregard for the Kurus; and the Sauvira Sumitra, called Dattamitra (LIA. i, pp. 656/804, n. 2); assisted by Bhima, Arjuna with only a single chariot subjugated all the kings of the east (prācyāḥ) backed by 10,000 chariots; and in the same way the south. Dhrtarüshtra's sentiments towards the Pandavas suddenly became poisoned, and from anxiety he could not sleep (I, 139).—§ 213 (Jatugrhap.): I, 151, 5911 (has escaped from the lac house).—§ 214 (Hidimbav.): I, 154, 6019, (6027), (6034), 6039 (A. offered to assist Bhīmasena against Hidimba, and exhorted him to kill him without delay; then he caused the Pandavas to proceed to a town not far off); 156, 6096.—§ 217 (Caitrarathap.): I, 166, 6346 (a brahman related how Bhishma prevailed upon Drona to teach the princes, etc.; both Arjuna and the others promised to do whatever he might ask as his fee, etc.).-§ 219 (do.): I, 168, 6419 (the brothers set out for the town of Drupada).—§ 221 (do.): I, 170, (6451), (6462), (6472). 6474, (6493), 6499 (while the Pandavas were wandering from Ekacakrā to the town of the Pancalas, Arjuna walking before them torch in hand, the Gandharva king Citraratha opposed them at the Ganga, but was vanquished by Arjuna, whom he then gave the Gandharvic maya called Cakshushi, and on whom and each of his brothers he bestowed 100 Gandharva horses; he gave them the counsel to select a fit purchita; Arjuna in return gave him the Agneya weapon).-§ 222 (Tapatyup.): I, 171, (6516) (as Citraratha had called A. Tāpatya, Arjuna caused him to relate Tapaty-upākhyāna). 173, 6633 ("their son was Kuru, the ancestor of Arjuna"). -§ 223 (Vāsishtha): I, 174, 6634 (Citraratha told Arjuna about Vasishtha). 175, (6649), 6659 (Citraratha related the hostilities between Viçvāmitra and Vasishtha to Arjuna).-§ 229 (Vasishthop.): 1, 182, (6888) (asked by Arjuna, Citraratha related why Kulmāshapāda commanded his queen to go to Vasishtha, etc.).—§ 230 (Dhaumyapuroh.): I, 183, (6913), 6915 (according to the counsel of Citraratha, the Pandavas installed Dhaumva as their purchita, and resolved to go to the svayamvara of Kṛshṇā).—§ 231 (Svayamvarap.): I, 184: The Pandavas went to the Pancala land in the company of brahmans who told them of the svayamvara, etc.). 185: On their way they beheld Vyāsa; they took up their quarters in the house of a potter; and adopting the brahmanical profession, they began to lead an eleemosynary life. Drupada always wished to bestow his daughter on Kirītin (i.e. Arjuna), and therefore caused a very stiff bow to be made which was incapable of being bent by anybody except Arjuna.—§ 233 (do.): I, 187: When Duryodhana, ctc., had in vain tried to string the bow, and Karna, though having succeeded in stringing it, had, as a suta, been rejected by Krshna, Jishnu (i.e. Arjuna) came forward. 188, 7049, 7051, 7052: Some of the brahmans spoke reproachingly of Arjuna's daring undertaking, some approved of it. Bending his head unto Icana and remembering Krshna, Arjuna accomplished the task; Krshnā approached Arjuna, who soon after left the lists, followed by her.- § 234 (do.): I, 189, 7075, 7080: When Drupada expressed his desire of bestowing his daughter on that brahman the kings resolved to slay Drupada and burn Kṛshṇā, but spare Arjuna, whom they took for a brahman; Arjuna and Bhimasena rescued them; Kṛshṇa kucw the Pāṇḍavas. 190, 7086, 7094, 7098, 7099: Karna is defeated by Arjuna ("accomplished in the Brahma and the Paurandara weapons," v. 7105), etc. Bhimasena and Arjuna with difficulty escaped from the throug, followed by Kṛshṇā.—§ 235 (do.): I, 191, (7138), 7141: When they came with Kṛshṇā, Kuntī said "enjoy ye all"; Yudhishthira declared that Arjuna should wed her, but agreed that she should be the common wife of them all.—§ 236 (do.): 1, 192: Dhrshtadyumna secretly followed Bhimasena and Ariuna, and from their conversation learned who they were.-§ 237 (Vaivāhikap.): I, 193, 7192: Dhṛshṭadyumna related what had happened; Arjuna is said to have large red eyes (v. 7175); from their conversation he concluded that they were the Pandavas of whom it had been heard that they had all escaped from the house of lac. 195, 7226, 7235, 7237: Drupada vowed to restore Yudhishthira on his paternal throne; he became very perplexed at the project of marrying Krshnā to all the five brothers; meanwhile Vyasa arrived .- § 241 (Vidurāgam.): I, 200, 7367: Vidura and Dhṛtarāshṭra became glad at the Pandavas having won Krshna; but Duryodhana and Karna tried to stir Dhrtarashtra up against them. 201, 7408: Duryodhana proposed several means of getting the better of the Pandavas, etc.- § 244 (Rajyalabhap.): I, 207, 7547: Dhrtarashtra caused the Pandavas together with Kuntī and Kṛshnā to repair to Khāndavaprastha (Indraprastha), giving them half the kingdom. - § 247 (Arjunavanavāsap.): I, 213, (7774): The Pāṇḍavas reigned in prosperity at Indraprastha; once Arjuna, having violated an established rule regarding Krshnā, set out to live twelve years in the forest.—§ 248 (do.): I, 214, (7796), 7804: Arjuna was drawn away to the bottom of the water by Ulūpī (upon whom he begat a son); she said that he would be invincible in water. - § 249 (do.): I, 215: A. visited many tīrthas, married Citrāngādā at Manipūra, where he dwelled for three years; she gave birth to a son. - § 250 (do.): I, 216f, 7850: A. visited the tirthas of the southern ocean, where he liberated the apsaras Varga, etc., in Narītīrthāni.-§ 251 (do.): I, 218, 7890, 7894: A. visits Krshna.—§ 252 (Subhadrāhar.): I, 219, 7920, (7923), 7928, 7929. 220. 7961: A. carried away Subhadra, the sister of Krshna. - § 253 (Haranāharanap.): I, 221, 7969, 7987, 8032, 8039, 8048: Krshna reconciled A. with the Bhojas, etc.; A. married Subhadrā and passed a whole year at Dvārakā; then Kṛshṇa remained for some time with A. at Indraprastha; Subhadra brought forth Abhimanyu, who became the favourite of Kṛshṇa and from his father acquired the Dhanurveda. Krshnā also obtained five sons (Crutakarman by Arjuna), who, after having studied the Vedas, from Arjuna acquired knowledge of all weapons celestial and human.—§§ 254-260 (Khāndavadah.): I, 222-234: 224, 8161, 8167; 225, 8201, (8203); 227, 8238, 8245, 8247, 8275, 8278, 8282; 228, 8298, 8301, 8308, 8309, 8310, 8312, 8317, 8322, 8326; 234, 8466, 8476, 8478: Kṛshṇa and Arjuna assisted Agni in burning the Khandava forest; Agni caused Varuna to give Arjuna the Gandiva bow, two inexhaustible quivers, and a car yoked with horses; then Agni gave Krshna the discus Sudarçana; Varuna gave Kṛshna the maco Kaumodaki; Indra in vain poured down showers of rain in order to prevent the burning. An incorporeal voice said that Krshna and Arjuna, being really the old rshis and gods Nara and Nārāyana, were invincible. Indra appeared and promised to give Arjuna all his weapons (both the Agneya and the Vayavya), when Mahadeva had been pleased by him; he granted Kṛshṇa that his friendship with Arjuna should be eternal. The car (I, 8183 ff.) which Varuna gave to Arjuna was furnished with celestial weapons, etc., and incapable of being vanquished by gods or Asuras; its banner bore a large monkey; the car was drawn by horses white as silver, born in the region of the Gandharvas (Gündharvaih), and harnessed with gold, and in speed resembling the wind or the mind; its splendour was great, and the sound of its wheels was tremendous; it had been created by the Prajapati Bhaumana (Vicvakarman) after severe ascetic meditation; no one could gaze at its splendour; it was the very car riding upon which Soma had vanquished the Danavas; it was furnished with an excellent flagstaff of golden colour, upon which was seen a celestial ape apparently bent upon burning everything it beheld; and upon the flags were seen various creatures of large size whose roars and yells caused the enemy's soldiers to faint.—§ 261 (Sabhākriyāp.): II, 1, (3), (6): Maya asked Arjuna to tell him what he was to do for him because he had been rescued by him in the Khandava forest; Arjuna told him to do something for Kṛshṇa, who causes him to build a palace for Yudhishthira. - § 262 (do.): II, 2, 37 (Krshna departed for Dvaraka). - § 263 (do.): II, 3, 58, 78: Maya told Arjuna about the huge riches on Hiranyacringa, and gave Arjuna the conch-shell Devadatta, etc.; the palace was constructed in fourteen months.- § 264 (do.): II, 4, 128: Among those who waited on Yudhishthira in the palace were the princes who, dressed in deer-skins, learned the science of arms under Arjuna.- § 272 (Rajasuyar.): II, 13, 557: Yudhishthira consulted his brothers, etc., as to the rajasuya; all people lived happily; Ariuna protected the people from enemies, etc.—§ 274 (do.): II, 15, 643: Deliberation about slaying Jarasandha. 16, 661: Some objections made by Yudhishthira are refuted by A.—§ 275 (do.): II, 17, 676: Approving the words of Arjuna, Krshna related the origin of Jarasandha.—§ 276 (Jarasandhavadhap.): II, 20, 774, 775, 787: A. set out with Bhimasona and Krshna to slay Jarasandha.—§ 277 (do.): II, 21, 804: They entered the city of Girivraja in the guise of snatakas, etc. 24, 938, 954, 971: The combat between Bhima and Jarasandha having lasted for thirteen days, Bhīma killed him on the fourteenth night; they installed Jarasandha's son Sahadeva as king of Magadha, then they returned to Indraprastha on Jarasandha's celestial car; Krshna set out for Dvārakā.—§ 278 (Digvijap.): II, 25, (984): Having obtained the bow, A., etc., prevailed upon Yudhishthira to let him subdue the north; A. set out on that celestial car which he had obtained from Agni and subdued the north, while his brothers subdued the other regions, and Yudhishthira stayed at Indraprastha .- § 279 (cf Digvijayaparvan): Arjuna subdued the Kulindas, Anarttas, Kālakūtas, Sumaņdala, and with him Çākala-dvīpa and king Prativindhya and the kings in Cakala-dvīpa and the Seven Islands (Saptadvipeshu, i.e. the Earth), and together with them he vanquished Bhagadatta, king of Pragjyotisha and friend of Indra, who was surrounded by Kiratas, Cinas, and other warriors dwelling on the sea-coast; after eight days of combat, Arjuna prevailed upon him to give tribute to Yudhishthira at his will (II, 26), 999, (1007). Having vanguished all the mountain kings of the north, he subdued Brhanta, the mountain king dwelling in Uluka, and with him Senavindu; at the command of Yudhishthira, he stayed at Devaprastha, the city of Senavindu, while his troops subjugated Modapura, Vamadova, Sudaman, Susankula, and the Northern Ulukas. Then, having vanquished the mountaineers, he conquered the town of the Paurava king Viçvagaçva; then the seven tribes of the Utsavasanketas, etc. Having conquered the Himavat and Nishkuta (? see BR.), he came to Cvetaparvata (II, 27). Having crossed Cvetaparvata, he subdued the country of the Kimpurushas ruled by Drumaputra, then by conciliatory proceedings the country named Hataka defended by Guhyakas. Then he came to the Manasa lake and all the sacred waters (rshikulyah).

Then he conquered the region of the Gandharvas, and took as tribute from the Gandharva city horses spotted as partridges and named mandukas ('frogs'). At the entrance to Northern Harivareha he was encountered by huge guardians (dvārapalas,), who told him that this city could not be conquered, that he who entered it was sure to perish, that nothing might be seen there by one with a human body, for this was the abode of the Northern Kurus, but that they would do anything else he would ask of them. At his request they gave him heavenly clothes, etc., as a tribute for Yudhishthira. Then he returned to Indraprastha, and gave all he had won to Yudhishthira (II, 28), 1048, 1051.—§ 286 (Rājasūyikap.): II, 33, 1221, 1234: Under Yudhishthira's rule the people were very happy, and great riches filled the treasury; then he resolved to celebrate the rajasuva; he engaged Indrasena and Viçoka and Puru, with Arjuna for his charioteer, to collect food, etc. Krshna himself had arrived there. - § 290 (Çiçupālav.): II, 42, 1475: In the quarrel between Krshņa, etc., and Cicupala on the occasion of the handing over of the gift of honour (Arghaharanap.), in which Cicupala was ultimately killed by Krshna, Cicupala also spoke with depreciation about Arjuna's, otc., slaying Jarasandha. — [§ 292a (Rājasūyikap.): II, 45a, 1607 (Dhananjaya, i.e. Arjuna, followed Yajñasena, i.e. Drupada).]—§ 293(Dyūtap.): II, 46, 1640: Terrible omens had appeared at the rajasuya, which Vyāsa explained as foreboding the destruction of the kshattriyas after thirteen years by Bhīma, A., etc.; A. prevailed upon Yudhishthira to give up his intention to die. -§ 294 (do.): II, 47 ff., 1670, 1755: Bhīma, Arjuna, etc., laughed at Duryodhana's mistakes in the palace; Çakuni caused him to invite the Pandavas to a match of dice.-§ 295 (do.): II, 52, 1890 (Krshna is the soul of Arjuna, and vice versd).- § 299 (do.): II, 68, (2257): At the match of dice Yudhishthira lost his kingdom, his brothers, himself, and Draupadi, etc.; Bhima wanted to burn his hands, but was appeased by Arjuna.—§ 301 (do.): II, 70, 2363, 2376: The admonitions of Arjuna, etc., retained Bhima from killing the Dhartarashtras. 71, 2383, 2388, 2399, (2400): Duryodhana said that if Bhima, Arjuna, and the twins would declare that Yudhishthira was not their master, then Draupadi would be free; A. said that he was certainly their master before the play; terrible omens appeared; Draupadī was granted a boon, and chose the liberty of Yudhishthira and his brothers. 72, (2423): Bhima threatened to slay all his foes instantly, but was restrained by Arjuna and Yudhishthira. 73. 2447: Dhrtarashtra sent Yudhishthira with his brothers and Kṛshṇā upon their cars to Indraprastha; he said that Arjuna is patient, etc.—§ 304 (Anudyūtap.): II, 77, (2543), (2545), 2546: Having been vanquished in the second match of dice, the Pandavas had to live thirteen years in the forest and a fourteenth among men without being recognized; when they were going away they threatened that Arjuna would slay Karna, etc.—§ 306 (do.): II, 80a, 2634, 2653, 2665: When going away, Arjuna had scattered sand-grains, thus alluding to the arrows he would shower in the battle; terrible omens appeared: Nărada declared that in the fourteenth year hence the Kauravas would all be destroyed by Bhima and Arjuna.-§ 311 (Aranyakap.): III, 4, 228: Saying that neither Bhima nor Arjuna would spare their focs, Vidura in vain exhorted Dhrtarashtra to give back to the Pandavas all they had lost at play.—§ 313 (do.): III, 6, 275: Dhṛtarāshṭra, who has banished Vidura, sent Sanjaya to the Pandavas to bring

Vidura back; Sanjaya was honoured by Bhima and Arjuna.— § 316 (Kirmīrav.): III, 11, 411, 425: A. stringed the Gandiva against Kirmira; but Bhima made him desist and slew him himself.—§ 317 (Arjunābhigam.): III, 12, 468, (471), 537, 593: Krshna said: "The earth shall drink the blood of Duryodhana"; Arjuna tried to pacify him by reciting the feats achieved in his former life; then Arjuna, "the soul of Kṛshṇa," became silent, and Janardana (i.e. Kṛshṇa) replied that he was identical with Arjuna; Krshna mentioned that A. won her at the svayamvara; Krshna promised that she should be avenged; "Arjuna will slay Karna, etc."- § 321 (Saubhavadhop.): III, 22, 894: Krshna took leave of A., etc., and set out for Dvaraka. - § 322 (Dvaitavanapr.): III, 23, 903, 917: Description of the Pandavas' going to the forest; A. told the citizens, etc., that they would carry off the good name of their enemies into their exile, and asked them to be seech the secetics to bless them.—§ 325 (Draupadiparitap.): III, 27, 1012, 1015: Krshna lamented their present state (she compared A. to Arjuna Kartavirya, etc.).—§ 327 (do.): III, 30, 1123 (discourse between Krshna and Yudhishthira); 33, 1325 (Arjuna is incomparable in battle).--§ 329 (Kāmyakav.): III, 36, 1441 (A. is a mighty rshi, the friend of Nārāyana, ancient, eternal, a god himself).—§ 330 (Indradarçana): III, 37, 1457, 1504: Yudhishthira taught A. in private the [Pratismrti] science, etc., and sent him away to Indra to obtain his weapons.—§ 331 (Kairātap.): III, 38, 1520, 1527, 1533, 1536, 1537: Arjuna on his way to Indra practised austerities for four months. 39, 1558, (1576), 1582, 1584, 1601: Combat between A. and Civa in the guise of a Kirāta, etc.; Çiva gave him "cakshus."- § 332 (do.): III, 39: A. worshipped Civa, (1624).—§ 333 (do.): III, 40, 1643, 1656, 1661: Civa said to A.: "Thou wast in thy former life Nara, the friend of Nārayana; in Badarī thou wast engaged in ascetic austerities for thousands of years; the Gandiva (which I got from thee by my power of illusion) is the bow with which thou assistedst Krshna in chastising the Danavas during the coronation of Indra." When granted a boon, Ariuna asked Civa to give him the Pāçupata weapon named Brahmaçiras (c). Having purified himself, he was instructed in its use on the condition that he should not hurl it against any human being, for then it would destroy the universe. The carth trembled, etc.; the gods and Danavas beheld the weapon in its embodied form by the side of Arjuna. Then Arjuna was touched by Civa, and all that was bad in his body was dispelled. Having said to Arjuna, "Go thou into heaven," Civa went up into the skies accompanied by Uma.- § 334 (do.): III, 41, 1665, 1672, 1676, 1680, 1705, 1711, 1713: Then the Lokapalas, etc., came to A. on the Himavat; they granted him "vision" (drshti) that he might see them; Yama gave him his staff as a weapon, Varuna his nooses, Kubera (saying that in ancient kalpas A. had ever gone through accetic austerities along with them) gave him his favourite weapon Antardhana (c), etc.- § 335 (Indralok.): III, 42, 1723, (1728), 1733, 1742: A. ascended with Mātali to heaven on Indra's car.- § 336 (do.): III, 43. 1778: A. dwelt with Indra at Amaravatī.—§ 337 (do.): III, 44: A. dwelt there for five years .- § 338 (do.): III, 45, 1812: Urvaçī becomes enamoured of A., who had studied the four Vedas with the Angas and Upanishads and the Akhyana (i.e. the Purana) as the fifth. 48, 1833, (1836), 1852, (1853), (1861), 1867: As Arjuna said that he regarded Urvaçī as his mother, she cursed him, saying that he would have to pass his time among females as a dancer and destitute of manhood; Indra told him that this would come to pass in the thirteenth year of their exile, then he should regain his manhood; (the desire of the man that listons to this history of A. never runs after lustful ends, etc.).-§ 339 (do.): III, 47: One day Lomaça came to the abode of Indra; as Lomaça wondered how A., who was a kshattriya, had attained the seat of Indra, Indra explained to him who Arjuna really was; A. had dwelt with Vishnu in Badari, which the gods and rshis were unable to behold, and whence the Ganga, worshipped by Siddhas and Caranas, springs forth; he and Krshna had, at Indra's desire, been born on earth and would lighten its burden, etc. Lomaça was sent to Yudhishthira in order to bring him news about A. and accompany him on a tīrthayātrā.—§ 340 (do.): III, 48, 1919, 1926: Dhrtarashtra expressed his anxiety at Arjuna's exploits to Sanjaya; 49, 1952, especially his encounter with Civa in the guise of a Kirāta, etc.—§ 341 (do.): III, 50, 1966: Arjuna's absence lasted for five years. -§ 342 (do.): III, 51, 1973, 1993: Dhrtarashtra expressed his anxiety before Sanjaya.—§ 343 (Nalop.): III, 52, 2018: One day, when the Pāṇḍavas were grieving for Arjuna, the rshi Brhadaçva came and told the history of Nala, who was yet more unfortunate than Yudhishthira. - § 356 ff. (Tirthay.): III, 80, 4001: The Pandavas, etc., lamented Arjuna. 81 ff.: Pulastya's enumerations of tirthas.—§ 377 (do.): III, 86, 8289, 8295: Yudhishthira told Dhaumya that he did not like to live longer in the Kāmyaka wood without Arjuna. 87 ff.: Dhaumya described the tirthas of the various regions to Yudhishthira.—§ 378 (do.): III, 91, 8424, 8428: Lomaça arrived and told that Arjuna had obtained Brahmaçiras (b), learned the Gändharva Veda, etc. 92, 8439: Lomuca said that Arjuna had asked him to accompany Yudhishthira to all the tirthas. 93 ff.: Accompanied by Lomaça, the Pandavas (except Arjuna), etc., visited all the tirthus. - § 400 (do.): III, 118, 10218, 10219, 10220: At the Narītīrthas they heard of, and praised the deed of Arjuna.- § 402 (do.): III, 120, 10282: Krshna said that Arjuna, etc., would never renounce the rules of his caste.-§ 418 (do.): III, 139, 10838: Krshnā always sought the protection of Bhīma, whether Arjuna were near or not. - § 420 (Gandhamādanapr.): III, 141, 10896: Yudhishthira complained to Bhima that he had not seen Arjuna for five years; they now ought to enter Gandhamadana (b) in company with brahmans of strict vows.—§ 424 (Bhīmakadalīkhandaprav.): III, 146, 11101: Bhīma thought "as Arjuna has gone to heaven and I have come here for the sake of the flowers, what will Yudhishthira do?"-§ 436 (Yakshayuddhap.): III, 159, 11658: When they had come to the hermitage of Arshtishena, Arshtishena told the Pandavas that they must not attempt to proceed further, but wait for Arjuna there.—§ 438 (do.): III, 162: Arjuna had never uttered an untruth; in heaven he was honoured by gods, Pitrs, and Gandharvas, and by Cantanu, who, after having performed seven great sacrifices on the Yamuna, resided in the world of Çakra, and had enquired about his welfare.—§ 440 (do.): III, 164, 11883, 11902: Since the departure of Arjuna the Pāndavas had not felt joy. After having dwelt in the abode of Indra for five years and obtained all celestial weapons from him, viz., Agneya, Vāruņa, Saumya, Vāyavya, Vaishnava, Aindra, Pācupata, Brāhmya, Pārameshthya, likewise those of Prajāpati, Yama, Dhātr, Savitr, Tvashtr, and Vaicravana, Arjuna took leave of Indra and came to Gandhamadana.-§ 441 (Nivātakavacayuddhap.): III, 165 f., 11903: One day the Pandavas saw Arjuna descending to them with Mătali on Indra's car: A. gave Draupadi precious gems. presented to him by Indra; the next morning Indra visited them.—§ 442 (do.): III, 167, 11937, (11943): When Indra had gone. A. related his journey; against the Kirāta he had in vain employed the Vayavya, Sthunakarna, Jala, and the Calabhastra, and showers of shafts and stones, as the Kirata had swallowed them all, and he had in vain discharged tho Brahmāstra.—§ 443 (do.): III, 168: Arjuna continued his tale; he enumerated a great many weapons, the use of which Indra promised to teach him: Mātali wondered that Ariuna was not jerked on the car of Indra, though Indra himself got jerked at the first pull of the steeds; when he had learned the use of the weapons, Indra had said that not even the gods could now conquer him; 'he had received fifteen weapons and learnt five ways of using them; Indra had asked him as his fee to slay the Nivatakavacas, and had given him the car (conducted by Matali) upon which he (Indra) had vanquished Bali, etc., and "this" diadem and ornaments of his own and the impenetrable mail, and he had fastened "this" durable (ajarām) string to the Gāndīva, and the gods gave him the shell Devadatta by which Indra had conquered the worlds (cf. § 446). — § 444 (do.): III, 169 f., 12173, 12181: Arjuna related his victory over the Nivatakavacas; Indra had formerly been told by Svayambhū that he himself would destroy them in another body; as the gods were unable to slay them, Indra had presented those weapons to Arjuna in order to have them killed. Then Arjuna and Mātali again went to the abode of the gods.—§ 445 (do.): III, 173: While returning, A. destroyed Hiranyapura, inhabited by Paulomas and Kālakhanjas, who could not be slain even by the gods, etc.; therefore Brahmán had determined that Arjuna, a mortal, should kill them; he employed the Raudra Mātali took Arjuna to the abode of Indra, and in detail related Arjuna's achievement to Indra, and Indra praised him, and said that gods, etc., would not be able to stand him in fight, etc.—§ 446 (do.): III, 174, 12281, (12289): Indra said that in the battlefield Bhīshma, Drona, etc., would not be equal to one-sixteenth part of Arjuna. Then Indra gave him "this" golden garland, the shell Devadatta, etc. (see § 443). Then Indra told him to depart. A. promised that he would show Yudhishthira all the celestial weapons the next morning. - § 447 (do.): III, 175, 12292, 12309: The next morning, when Arjuna was about to show the celestial weapons to Yudhishthira, the earth trembled, etc. Vayu laid colestial garlands on Ariuna; sent by the gods, Narada came and prevailed upon Ariuna not to charge the celestial weapons without necessity, which would destroy the three worlds; then the gods departed.—§ 448 (Ajagarap.): III, 176, 12317: The Pandavas spent four years with Arjuna in the gardens of Kubera.—§ 450 (do.): III, 179, 12427: Bhima having been seized by a serpent (Nahusha), Yudhishthira directed Ariuna to protect Draupadi, while he himself with Dhaumya set out on the tracks of Bhima. - § 452 (Markandeyas.): III, 183, 12559: In the Kamyaka wood Krshna, "the friend of Arjuna," came accompanied by Satyabhama, etc.—§ 512 (Ghoshayātrāp.): III, 236, 14752, 14770: While the Pandavas were dwelling at the lake [of Dvaitavana], Dhrtarashtra was much afflicted, thinking that Arjuna would not have left heaven, where he received the celestial weapons, if it were not for the purpose of avenging himself and his brothers. 243, 14941, 14956: Duryodhana, etc..

having set out to insult the Pandavas under the pretext of supervising their cattle stations, was vanquished by the Gandharva king Citrasena; Duryodhana was made captive. and the soldiers took refuge with Yudhishthira, who prevailed upon Arjuna to rescue Duryodhana, he being himself prohibited by a sacrifice. 244: As the Gandharvas would not set free Duryodhana, etc., as requested by Arjuna. a flerce battle ensued. 245, 14984, 15001, 15002, 15003, 15004, 15005: The Gandharvas in vain attempted to break the cars of the Pandavas; especially Arjuna sent millions of them to the abode of Yama by means of his Agneya weapon. The Gandharvas then rose up to the skies, taking the Dhartarashtras with them, showering maces, darts, etc., upon Arjuna, who killed them with his weapons Sthunakarna (C. Sthūlā°), Indrajāla, Saura, Āgneya, and Saumya. At last Citrasena rushed at Arjuna, armed with a mace of iron; when Arjuna had cut that mace into seven pieces with his arrows, Citrasena, by means of his science, concealed himself from the view of Arjuna, and thus continued to fight with him; but Arjuna destroyed his power of concealing himself by shooting at him with his celestial arms, guided by the sound (çabdavedham samüçritya). Then Citrasena showed himself to Arjuna, reminding him that he was his friend, and the battle was interrupted. 246, 15010: Citrasena relates that he had been acquainted with the purpose of Duryodhana, etc., and had been requested by Indra to bring Duryodhana thither in chains; Arjuna entreated him to set Duryodhana free, but, at the request of Citrasena, they left the matter to be decided by Yudhishthira; Yudhishthira then liberated all the Kauravas. 249, 15070: Duryodhana renounced all food from shame, as he had been liberated by Arjuna.- § 513 (do.): III, 252, 15173, 15189: The Danavas (Daityas) in Pātāla comforted Duryodhana, saying that Naraka, who had been reborn as Karna, would slay Arjuna, etc., and that the Samcaptakas, possessed by the Rakshasas, were desirous of slaying Arjuna, etc. - § 514 (do.): III, 252, 15196: Karna promised to slay Arjuna; Duryodhana was comforted. - § 518 (Mṛgasvapn.): III, 258: The Pāṇḍavas left Dvaitavana and repaired to the Kamyaka forest.—§ 522 (Draupadiharanap.): III, 264: The Sindhu king Jayadratha saw Krshna and became enamoured of her. 265: Kotikasya introduced him to Krshna. 266: She said that her husbands were hunting, Arjuna to the west, etc. 267: Jayadratha was treated hospitably by Krshna, and asked her to leave the miserable Pandavas and become his wife. 268, 15656: She threatened him with Krshna and Arjuna, etc., but at last she was obliged to ascend his chariot. 269: The Pandavas overtook Jayadratha. 270, 15695: Krshnā showed Jayadratha each of the five Pāndavas. 271, 15717, 15759, 15767: Arjuna killed the twelve Sauvīra heroes, etc.; Jayadratha, etc., fled; Arjuna exhorted Bhima to refrain from slaughtering the remnant of the Saindhava host; Bhīma and Arjuna went in search of Jayadratha; Arjuna killed the horses of Jayadratha, but entreated Bhima not to kill himself.—§ 524 (Jayadrathavim.): III, 272, 15805: Jayadratha obtained from Civa that he should be able to defeat all the five Pandavas; but Arjuna was invincible, being in reality Nara. who had formerly practised austerities in Badari, and had acquired the thunderbolt, etc., from the Lokapalas, and was protected by Krshna. The Pandavas continued to dwell in Kāmyaka.—§ 546 (Kuṇḍalāharaṇap.): III, 300 ff.: Lomaça had conveyed a message from Indra to Yudhishthira: "That intense fear of thine which thou dost never express to anyone I will remove when Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) has left." After twelve years of the exile of the Pandavas had passed away, Indra obtained for Arjuna the earrings and mail of Karpa, giving him a lance instead; 301, 16974, 16976; 302, 16984, 16989.—[§ 547 (do.): III, 309: Karna was always desirous of fighting with Phalguna (i.e. Arjuna), and he and Karna used to challenge each other. ]- § 548 (Aranevap.): III, 313, 17409, 17412: When the Pandavas had left Kümvaka and returned to Dvaitavana, and a deer carried off a brahman's arant and mantha, Arjuna repented that he had not slain Karna; Arjuna and his brothers were sent after water and dropped down dead, until Yudhishthira resuscitated them all by answering the questions of the Yaksha (i.e. Dharma).—§ 549 (Pandavapr.): IV, 1, 8, (9), (19); 2, 41, 51, (52), 60; 5, 149, 150, (154); 11, 305: Yudhishthira asked Arjuna to select some spot where they might dwell during the fourteenth year without being recognized; Arjuna mentioned some countries surrounding the kingdom of the Kurus; Yudhishthira chose the city of Virata, where Arjuna presented himself as one of the neuter sex, Brhannala by name, saying that he had been a waiting-maid of Krshna's; Arjuna carried Krshna; Arjuna caused them to stow away their weapons on a camī tree near a cemetery; they assumed secret names, Vijaya (i.e. Arjuna), etc.; Arjuna (§ 5490), "who proceeded to the Khandava forest and gratified Agni on a single car, vanquishing and slaying Nagas and Rakshasas, and who married the sister of the Naga king Vasuki . . . . the tenth Rudra, the thirteenth Aditya, the ninth Vasu, the tenth Graha," said: "I sing, dance, and play on instruments; I will be dancing-master to Uttara."—§ 550 (Samayapal.): IV, 13, 332: Arjuna distributed among his brothers the proceeds of the sale of worn-out clothes which he received in the inner apartments of the palace, etc.; he pleased the king and all the ladies of the inner apartments by singing and dancing .- § 551 (Kicakavadhap.): IV, 14-24: 19. 576; 24, 846: The senapati Kicaka tempted Krshna, and was slain by Bhimusena. - § 552 (Goharanap.): IV, 35-69: 35, 1168; 36, 1179, 1180, 1188; 37, 1198, 1206, 1213, 1229; 38, 1264, 1272; 39, 1299; 41, 1324; 43, 1344, 1356, 1362; 44. 1368, (1371), (1374), 1375, 1378, (1380), 1387; 45, (1395), 1398, 1399, 1407, 1425; 46, 1445, (1446); 47, 1492; 48, 1514, 1516; 50, 1574; 51, 1602; 53, 1630, 1640; 54, 1684; 55, 1703, 1715, 1726, 1728, (1738); 56, 1764, 1772; 57, 1785, 1787, 1790, 1811, 1819; 58, 1824, 1833, 1853, 1871, 1873, 1874, 1878, 1882, 1886; 59, 1901, 1905, 1916; 60, 1949; 61, (1963), 1966, 1989, 1992; 62, 1998, 2014; 64, 2054, 2065; 65, 2086, (2101); 66, 2120, 2122, (2140), 2142: Duryodhana, etc., invaded Virāṭa's country and plundered his cattle and wealth. The Pandavas helped Virāţa; Uttara with Brhannalā (i.e. Arjuna) for his charioteer encountered the Kurus; Arjuna seized his own weapons, defeated the foes, and was recognized; but the appointed time had passed; the conquered cattle and wealth was recovered and the Kurus fled; when Uttara became afraid he was comforted by Arjuna: (§ 552d) "At Indra's the Paulomas and command I formerly slew . . . Kalakhanjas; aham Indrad draham mushtim, Brahmanah krtahastatām | prāgadhs tumulam citram anividdham (B. iti viddhi) Prajapateh; on the other side of the Ocean I vanquished 60,000 of car-warriors residing in Hiranyapura . I have obtained the Raudra from Rudra, the Varuna from Varuna, the Agneya from Agni, the Vayavya astra from Mātariçvan, the thunderbolt (vajra) and other weapons from

Cakra."—§ 552 ( $\beta$ ) (44, v. 1375 f.): Enumeration of A.'s ten names.—§ 552 ( $\gamma$ ) (45, v. 1429 ff.): Combat with the Gandharvas on the occasion of the Ghosha-vātrā; conflict at Khāndava against D. and Dā.; combat on behalf of Indra against the Nivatakavacas and Paulomas; svayamvara of Kṛshṇā. — § 552 (δ) (45, v. 1433 f.): Drona, Çakra, Vaicravana, Yama, Varuna, Agni, Krpa, Krshna (Mādhava), Pinākapānin (Civa) [have been my preceptors].—§ 552 (c) (49, v. 1535 ff.): Alone he saved the Kurus (from the Gandharvas), satiated Agni, led the life of a brahmacarin for five years; taking up Subhadra on his car, he alone challenged Kṛshṇa to single combat; he fought with Rudra as a forester; rescued Krshnā (from Jayadratha); for five years studied the use of arms under Indra; vanquished all foes; vanquished the Gandharva king Citrasena; vanquished the Nivatakavacas and Kālakhanjas.-Arjuna caused Uttara to bring away the white garments of Drona and Krpa and the yellow ones of Karna and the blue ones of Duryodhana and Acvatthaman, but not these of Bhīshma, because he was not stupefied; these garments he presented to Uttara.—§ 553 (Vaivāhikap.2): IV, 70, 2267, 2289; 71, (2291), 2297, 2299, 2303, 2306, 2324; 72, (2327), 2346: After the victory over the Kurus, Arjuna praised Yudhishthira before Virāţa, and showed him all the Pandavas; Uttara spoke about Arjuna's prowess, and described each of the Pandavas, especially Arjuna ("it was by him that Bhīshma, Drona, and Duryodhana were vanquished"). Virāţa offered to bestow his daughter Uttarā upon Arjuna, who accepted her for Abhimanyu. The nuptial festival was held at Upaplavya, where a great many kings came with akshauhinis of troops.—§ 554 (Sainyodyogap.): V. 1. 5; 7. 140. (167): After the nuptials the assembled kings took counsel of each other about the preparations of war; after Kṛshṇa had set out for Dvārakā, Arjuna and Duryodhana came thither while Krshna was asleep; Arjuna chose Krshna himself, who was not to fight, and Krshna promised to become Arjuna's charioteer; Arjuna came back to Yudhishthira with Krshna and the foremost Daçarhas. -- § 555 (do.): V, 8, 199, 214, 215; 18, 561, 567: Calya came with an army to the Pandavas, but was enlisted in the cause of Duryodhana; he, however, promised Yudhishthira to dispirit Karna as his charioteer, and related the misery endured by Indra and his queen.—§ 556 (Sanjayayanap.): V, 20-32; 22, 658, 668, 706, 711; 26, 758, 759; 27, 785; 29, 861; 30, 868: Drupada's purchita was sent as a messenger to Dhrtarashtra; he said, "Nobody can fight Arjuna and Krshna"; Dhrtarāshtra sent Drupada's purchita back to the Pandavas. Praising Arjuna, etc. (22a, etc.), Dhṛtarāshṭra sent Sanjaya to Upaplavya, where he saluted Dhanshinya (237); Yudhishthira said that by a single effort of his hand (23c) A. could shoot sixty-one whetted and keenedged shafts, furnished with excellent feathers, etc.; Yudhishthira demanded Indraprastha, compared Arjuna, etc., with Duryodhana, etc.; the Pandavas might be compared with a tree of righteousness, whose trunk was Arjuna, etc.; Sanjaya then bade farewell to A., etc. (30v); Yudhishthira declared Sanjaya to be as dear to him as Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna); Sanjaya, having returned to Hastinapura, spoke to Dhrtarashtra about Arjuna's ascending to the very heavens, etc.-§ 561 (Yanasandhip.): V, 47-71: 48, 1810, 1815, 1816, 1831; 49, 1933, 1940, 1963; 51, 2031, 2037, 2084; 52, 2092; 53, 2109, 2111; 54, 2131, 2135; 55, 2182, 2184, 2195, 2202; 56, 2215, 2219; 57, 2246, 2247, 2292; 59, 2329, 2352, 2358; 6C, 2366, 2378; 65, 2497; 66, 2499; 67, 2522; 68, 2523; 69, 2545; The next morning Sanjava in the council hall related that Arjuna (! cf. § 556, V. 23-28) had said with Yudhishthira's sanction that Sanjaya should threaten Duryodhana, etc., saying that the Pandavas only wished for war; Arjuna said (§ 561b, V, 48) that one morning when he had finished his water rites and prayers, a brahman said to him that he would have to fight with his foes, and that either Indra riding on his steed would walk before him, or Krshna would protect him from behind riding on his car drawn by Sugriva; and Arjuna had preferred Vāsudeva (Kṛshṇa) as his ally to Indra. Arjuna also said that Duryodhana thought of imprisoning Krshna and seeks to create a sudden disunion between Krshna and Arjuna, and relates terrific omens; "I will hurl the Sthungkarna, Pācupata, and Brāhma weapons, and all those that Cakra gave me." Bhishma said that Nara and Narayana are Arjuna and Krshna; Arjuna with an arrow severed in battle the head of the Asura Jambha, etc., and Bhishma rebuked Karna, who had seen his brother in the city of Virāta slain by Arjuna; Sanjaya mentioned Arjuna's burning of the Khandava forest. Dhrtarashtra was most afraid of Bhima (who in height is higher than Arjuna by the span of the thumb); yet he was also afraid of Arjuna; "33 years have passed away since the burning of the Khandava forest; we have never heard of his being defeated anywhere"; Duryodhana alluded to the resolution of the Samcaptakas to slay Arjuna. - § 561 h (Yānas.): V, 56: Bhaumana (i.e. Viçvakarman, Nīl.) and Çakra had always created wonderful forms, [he who is] Trashtr, [and] Dhātr (i.e. Prajāpati, Nīl.); for on this (i.e. Arjuna's) flagstaff they (i.e. Tvashtr, Cakra, and Dhatr, Nil.) have made forms by divine illusion (devamāyayā); and at Bhīmasena's request Hanumat will also place his own image on it. The banner in all directions both perpendicularly and laterally covered one voiana, and even if trees stood in its way its course could not be impeded; it was ever varying like Cakra's bow (i.e. the rainbow). And to that chariot were yoked 100 white celestial steeds with the speed of the winds, given by Citraratha; neither on earth, nor in the sky, nor in heaven, their course could be impeded; a boon had been granted that their number would always remain full, however often they might be slain. -Arjuna had got Karna, Jayadratha, etc., assigned as his share in the combat. Arjuna was protected by the celestials; Sanjaya had seen two straight lines on his foot soles; Agni would help him as in Khāndava; he took up 500 arrows at a time, and Krshna protected him; on a single chariot Arjuna conquered the whole earth, etc.; he had said that Bhīshma, etc., were all on the eve of death, if they did not give up to Yudhishthira his own share of the kingdom. - § 562 (Bhagavadyanap.): V, 72-95: 74, 2739; 77, 2799; 78. (2802); 79, 2838; 81, 2865; 82, 2907, 2916; 83, 2949; 90, 3156, 3209, 3210: A. and Yudhishthira were averse from war, and A. told Krshua to exert himself sincerely to bring about peace; if, however, Duryodhana would not give them what they demanded, he would annihilate the Kshattriya race. During Krshna's embassy Kunti compared A. to Arjuna Kārtavīrya, and mentioned the invisible voices in the night of Arjuna's birth.—§ 563 (Dambhodbhavop.): V, 96, 3494, 3496 (identified with Nara).—§ 567 (Bhagavadyanap.): V, 124-132: 124, 4172, 4173, 4178, 4180; 125, 4199, 4201; 126, 4229; 131, 4425: Kṛshṇa mentioned Arjuna's exploits before Duryodhana, and said that Bhishma, etc., could not contend with Bhims and A.—§ 569 (do.): V, 137, 4644, 4663; 138, 4680; 140, 4747; 144, 4887; 145, 4924, 4925, 4926; 146, 4949, 4950, 4951: Kunti asked Krshna to remind A. of the voice heard at his birth, and tell him always to tread in the path pointed out by Draupadi; that Bhīma and Arjuna, like two Yamas, were capable of slaying the very gods, etc. Bhishma and Drona reminded Duryodhana of the exploits of A.; Drona said that his affection for A. was greater than for Acvatthaman. Duryodhana had chosen Karna as the antagonist of Arjuna. Krshna described Arjuna's banner, made by Bhaumana by means of celestial illusion; his Aindra, Agneya, and Maruta weapons, etc. Karna promised Kunti, that except Arjuna, her other sons should not be slain by him - § 570 (Sainyaniryanap.): V, 151-159: 153, 5197; 154, 5232; 157, 5318, 5328: At the commencement of the battle Anadhrshti, etc. (ζ), marched surrounding Krshna and Arjuna, all of them blowing their couchs on entering Kurukshetra. As Yudhishthira complained that he had to slay his preceptors, etc., A. reminded him of what Kuntī and Vidura had said through Krshna. Bhīshma said that he did not know of any warrior upon earth who was equal to him, except Arjuna; but Arjuna would never openly fight with him. Karna wanted to fight with Arjuna, but not before Bhīshma was slain. Arjuna "of curly hair" was made the leader of all the leaders of the Pandava army, and Krshna the leader of Arjuna and the driver of his steeds. Bhīshmaka's son Rukmin offered Arjuna his assistance if he was afraid; A., mentioning his exploits, and that he had paid his homage to Rudra, etc. (v), for battle's sake, would not say he was afraid.—§ 571 (Ulūkadūt.): V, 160-164: 160, 5460, 5513; 161, 5558; 162, 5578, 5586, 5640; 163, 5651, 5695, 5697; 164, 5704, 5706: Ulūka had to state before A. that among the Kuru troops were the Kāmbojus, etc.  $(\gamma)$ ; "I know that thy Gandiva is full 6 cubits long"; Uluka repeated the statement to the Pandavas, etc., and once more repeated his words to A.; A. said that Duryodhana's contrivance of seeking cover behind Bhīshma would be of no avail, as he would himself slay Bhīshma. — § 572 (Ruthātiruthas.): V, 165-172: 172. 5935.—§ 573 (Ambop.): V, 173-196: 185, 7308; 193, 7560; 194, 7587: "A. had been ordained by Svayambhū to slay Bhīshma." Karna having said that he could annihilate Bhīma and Arjuna in the course of five nights, Bhīshma ridiculed him, saying that he would think otherwise when he had encountered Arjuna and Krshna; to Yudhishthira Arjuna said that with Krshna as his ally he might exterminate the three worlds with the gods, etc., in the twinkling of an eye, etc. In the array of Yudhishthira, Bhima and Arjuna were in the second division, then, with Krshna, in the middle division together with Virāţa, etc.—§ 576 (Bhagavadg.): VI, 13 42: 19, 713, (714), 723; 20, 754, 759; 21, 761, 765; 22, 785; 23, 793, 795, (796), 813; 25, 833, 878; 26, 880, 923, (932); 27, (951), 957, (986); 28, (997), 998, 1002, 1030; 29, 1036; 30, 1080, 1096, (1097), (1101), 1110; 31, 1127, 1137; 32, (1142), 1157, 1168; 34, (1216), 1236, 1243, 1246; 35, (1247), 1293, 1296, (1297), 1300; 36, (1302); 37, (1322); 38, (1375); 41, (1427); 42, (1455), 1463, 1515, (1527), 1530: Yudhishthira told Arjuna to array the troops in a needle-mouthed (quoimukha) array in conformity with the words of M.-r. Brhaspati. Arjuna said that he would make a raira-array, which was designed by Indra. Cikhandin was protected by A. Yudhishthira sorrowfully addressed Arjuna, who consoled him, mentioning his truthfulness, righteousness, etc. At Krshna's instance Arjuna recited a hymn to Dürgā, who appeared and gave him assurance of victory. Arjuna asked Krshna to place his chariot between the two armies, so that he might see who had assembled to fight. Beholding his relatives, etc., Arjuna was filled with compassion and overcome with despondency, and refused to fight. Krshna appeals to Arjuna to shake off his despondency, but in vaiu. Krshna then explained to Ariuna the nature and the attributes of the soul, and the folly of grieving for the dead, and exhorted him to fulfil the duties of his caste by fighting like a man, and to concern himself with work for work's sake and not for the sake of its results, etc. (Bhagavadgītā) Arjuna praised Kṛshṇa; his delusion was destroyed, and he once more seized the Gandiva. - § 577 (Bhishmay.): VI. 43, (1543), 1560: Beholding A. again seizing the Gandiva, the Pandavas and Somakas were filled with joy. - § 578 (do.), VI, 44-51: THE FIRST DAY'S ENCOUNTER: 45, 1678; 49, 1994, 1998, 2017; 50, 2072: Bhīshma attacked Arjuna; Abhimanyu was regarded equal to Arjuna; placing himself in front of Cankha, A. attacked Bhishma; Cankha mounted Arjuna's chariot; Bhishma abandoned Arjuna, and attacked Drupada. The Pandavas were routed, the sun set, and the Pandavas withdrew their forces. Arjuna was indifferent; Krshna consoled Yudhishthira, who recommended the array called Krauñeāruṇa. When morning dawned, Dhrehtadyumna placed Arjuna in the van of the army; (§ 578e, VI, 50) A.'s standard was created at Indra's command by the celestial artificer. A. blows the Devadatta. - § 579 (do.), VI, 52-55: Second DAY: 52, 2128, 2132, 2142, 2144, 2163, 2167, 2168, 2172, 2189; 55, 2383, 2391, 2393 : Bhishma shot on A., etc. (a); A. told Krshna to drive his chariot before Bhīshma; only Bhīshma, Drona, and Karna were able to encounter Arjuna; encounter between Bhishma and A., who was surrounded by Satyaki, etc.; the Kurus were routed; A. and Krshna blew their conchs.-§ 580 (do.), VI, 56-59; THIRD DAY: 58, 2487; 59, 2563, 2586, 2588, 2621, 2639, 2646: Arjuna and Dhrshtadyumna formed an array in the shape of the half-moon, with Arjuna on the left wing; Arjuna fought with the Kauravas, who could not be defeated, as they were protected by Drona; and the Pandavas could not be defeated as they were protected by Arjuna and Bhīma; at last Bhīshma, etc. (1), broke the ranks of the Pandavas. D., Da., G., Pc., U., and Ra. sulogized Arjuna. Arjuna routed the Kaurava army, and their flight could not be checked by Bhishma and Drona, but was checked by Duryodhana. Kṛshṇa told Arjuna to fight Bhīshma; he and Arjuna were both wounded by Bhīshma, and the Pandava army was routed; Bhishma ordered Drona, etc. (u), to attack Arjuna; the grandson of Cini (i.e. Sātyaki - Yuyudhāna) came to Arjuna's assistance. Krshna jumped down from the chariot with his discus Sudarçana in his hand, and rushed towards Bhīshma, but was held back by Arjuna; then Duryodhana, etc. (v), attacked Arjuna, who invoked the Mahendra weapon and checked the Kaurava host; A. then produced a river of blood, with Rākshasas on its banks. At sunset the Kurus (Bhīshma, etc.) withdrew their forces; Arjuna did the same. There was a great uproar among the Kurus: "the Sauviras (m) have all been slain by Arjuna, and he has vanouished Crutāyus, etc. (ρ)."—§ 581 (do.), VI, 60-68: FOURTH DAY: 60, 2656, 2673; 61, 2697: Bhishma, Drona, etc., attacked Arjuna. Arjuna and Krshna as incarnations of the old rshis Nara and Nārāyana.—§ 582 (do.), VI, 69-74: FIFTH DAY: Bhishma proceeded in a Makara-array, the Pāndavas in a Cycna-array; Arjuna attacked Bhīshma; Duryodhana protected Bhishma, who was attacked by the Pandavas headed by Arjuna. (§ 5826, VI, 71): A.'s standard bore the device of a lion's tail and looked like a blazing mountain in the welkin . . . of celestial workmanship . . . with various hues; looking like a rising comet it could not be obstructed by trees. The Kurus were afraid and seemed to melt away. Arjuna encountered Drona (ζ). Duryodhana urged 25,000 to slay Arjuna, who, however, slew them all. The Matsyas and Kekayas surrounded Arjuna and Abhimanyu. At sunset both parties withdrew their troops.—§ 583 (do.), VI, 75-80: SIXTH DAY: 75, 3303, 3310: The next day the Pandavas were arranged in the Makara-array, headed by Drupada and Arjuna. The Pandava army was protected by A.; the Kauravas fled, mangled by Bhīma and Arjuna.—§ 584 (do.), VI, 81-86: SEVENTH DAY: 81, 3572; 82, 3584; 84, 3743, 3748; 85, 3760; 86, 3828, 3834: The next day Yudhishthira disposed his troops in a vajra-array; many kings attacked Arjuna, among others the Trigarta king with his brothers; Arjuna invoked the Aindra weapon; the foes fled and were rescued by Bhishma. When the Kuru army had been routed by Arjuna, and Bhishma had proceeded against the chariot of Arjuna, Duryodhana exhorted the kings to protect Bhishma. Fighting with Alambusha, Sātyaki employed the Aindra weapon which he had obtained from Arjuna, and destroyed the productions of Alambusha's illusive force. Arjuna caused Krshna to drive the chariot towards Bhīshma; A. fought with Suçarman, and slew many. The Trigarta king and thirty-two others attacked Arjuna, who slew sixty of them and then hastened to slay Bhīshma. The Trigarta king attacking Arjuna, Çikhandin, etc., came to his aid. Arjuna shot at them with the Gandiva. Duryodhana and Jayadratha, etc., came in order to protect Bhishma against Arjuna; A. fought against many foes. At sunset Arjuna (having vanquished Suçarman, etc.), etc., proceeded to their tents.-§ 585 (do.), VI, 87-98: EIGHTH DAY: 89, 3949, 3965; 90, 3977, 3979, 3981, 3983, 3986, 4022, 4040, 4048, 4052; 95, 4243, 4322; 96, 1358; 98, 4476, 4495: Dhrshtadyumna formed a Cringatakaarray: Bhīmasena and Sātyaki, etc., in the wings, next to them Arjuna and Krshua, etc. A., etc.  $(\xi)$ , rushed against all the kings under the command of Duryodhana with horses of the Kamboja, etc.  $(\rho)$ , breed. Arjuna's son Iravat (b)attacked the Kauravas, but was slain by the Rākshasa, Rshyaçriga's son [Alambusha]. Arjuna, etc., slew many; he complained of Iravat's death before Kṛshṇa; he fought Bhīshma, etc. (111). When dark night set in, both parties withdrew their armies. "Yudhāmanyu protects Arjuna's left wheel, Uttamaujas his right wheel, and Arjuna protects Cikhandin"; A. told Dhrshtadyumna to place Cikhandin before Bhīshma; he would himself be his protector.- § 586 (do.), VI, 99-107: NINTH DAY: 101, 4589, 4597, 4622, 4642; 102, 4650, 4655; 104, 4729; 106, 4848, 4871; 107, 4912, 4924, 4968, 4976, (4989): A. fought Bhishma, Krpa, and Drona; then the Trigarta king and his son; A. employed the Vâyavya weapon; the Trigarta division turned their backs; Duryodhana, etc. (1), surrounded A. A. slew all the followers of Suçarman; fought Duryodhana. Krshna urged Arjuna to slay Bhishma; Krshna left the chariot and rushed at Bhīshma, whip in hand, but was brought back by Arjuna. When the sun set, both parties withdrew their forces. Krshna said that Arjuna, etc.  $(\chi)$ , were invincible; they went to Bhishma himself in order to ask him about the means of killing him; Bhīshma advised A. to fight with him, placing Cikhandin before him; A. grieved at the prospect of killing Bhishma, but was reminded by Krshna of his vow to slay Bhishma. The Pandavas and Krshna went away with rejoicing hearts. - § 587 (do.), VI, 108-120: TENTH DAY: 108, 5011; 110, 5094, 5114, 5115, 5125, 5139; 111, 5195; 112, 5213, 5218; 113, 5284, 5287, 5289, 5290; 114, 5298, 5308, 5324; 115, 5340, 5341; 116, 5428, 5429, 5430, 5433, 5434, 5435; 117, 5455, 5459, 5465, 5470, 5472; 119, 5627, 5632, 5642: The Pandavas went out for battle, placing Çikhandin in their van; Bhīmasena and Arjuna became the protectors of his wheels, etc.; headed by Arjuna, they proceeded against Bhishma; Arjuna urged Cikhandin to slay Bhīshma, while he himself would check Drona, etc. (8); A. defeated the Kuru army; Duryodhana complained of A. before Bhishma, etc. Urged by A., Cikhandin, etc., attacked Bhīshma; Duhçāsana attacked Arjuna and Cikhandin; A. could not advance further than to the chariot of Duhcasana; A. compelled Duhçasana to turn back, and then crushed the Kuru troops; Duhçasana again resisted him; Arjuna and Cikhandin approached Bhīma (for aid); Duryodhana urged the Trigarta king Suçarman to slay Arjuna and Bhīmasena; A. fought Calya, etc. (k); Drona, etc., fought Arjuna and Bhimasena; so did Bhishma; Drona, etc. (f), fought the Parthas, especially Arjuna, etc. (o); the sons of Dhrtarashtra fought with Çikhandin and A.; A. fought with Bhishma and Bhagadatta, and urged Cikhandin to slay Bhishma; the Kurus attacked Arjuna; no chariot-warrior ventured to approach Bhishma except Arjuna and Cikhandin; Bhishma did not defend himself against Cikhandin, whom Arjuna urged quickly to slay Bhīshma; Duhçāsana fought with Arjuna and all the Parthas, but was vanquished by A.; the Videhas, etc.  $(\rho)$ , attacked Arjuna, who defeated them all by means of colestial weapons; then A. fought with Duhcasana, etc., Bhīshma, etc.; Kṛshṇa urged A. to slay Bhīshma; the Pancala king Dhrshtaketu, etc. (v), were afflicted by Bhishma and rescued by Arjuna; protected by Arjuna, Cikhandin rushed against Bhīshma; A. slew all Bhīshma's followers, and then rushed at him himself; Drona, etc. (employing celestial weapons), fought with A.; Bhīshma said to Duḥcasana that A. was invincible, and that he himself was not able to be vanquished by D., Da., and Ra.; Dhrtarashtra's sons surrounded Bhishma, but fled before Arjuna. Bhishma fell down from his chariot a little before sunset, but put off his death, as the sun was in the southern solstice; both parties desisted from battle; as Bhīshma's head hung down he asked for a pillow; Arjuna supported his head with three arrows shot from the Gandiva and consecrated by means of mantras, at which Bhīma was highly gratified. - § 588 (do.), VI, 121-122: ELEVENTH DAY: 121, 5776, 5780, 5781: The next morning. as Bhīshma asked for water, Arjuna mounted his chariot and from the Gandiva shot an arrow consecrated with mantras and identified with the Parjanya weapon, therewith piercing the earth, and there arose a jet of pure and cold water; Bhīshma praised Arjuna: "even Nārada spoke of thee as an ancient rshi . . . "; he said to Duryodhana that the weapons appertaining to Agni, etc., were known only to Arjuna and Krshna. Bhishma tried to win over Karna to the side of his uterine brothers, but he said that he would fight Arjuna, etc., though protected by Krshna. - § 589 (Dronabhish.), VII, 1-11: 2, 67, 82; 3, 110; 6, 164; 7, 197; 8, 226; 10, 327; 11, 419, 422: Karna waited upon Bhīshma, mentioning the danger menacing the Kurus from Arjuna with the Gundiva, etc., Arjuna's battle with Civa, etc. Yudhishthira disposed his troops in the form of a krauñca (crane), with Krshna and Arjuna at the head. The Pandavas and Srajayas were defeated by Drona; Yudhishthira asked A. to check Drona. Dhrtarashtra regretted that Duryodhana did not know Krshna and Arjuna. - § 590 (do.), VII, 12-16: ELEVENTH DAY (Sanjaya begins his narrative in detail): 12. 453; 13, (472): Drona promised to seize Yudhishthira, if he was not protected by Arjuna (with his weapons received from Indra and Rudra, etc.); Arjuna must therefore be withdrawn from Yudhishthira. Yudhishthira learnt through his spies that Drona had promised to seize him; A. consoled him. A flerce battle commenced; protected by Drona and Arjuna, both hosts seemed to stand inactive. In order to rescue Yudhishthira, A. attacked Drona's division. When the sun set, both parties withdrew their troops. The Pandavas, etc., praised Arjuna. - § 591 (Samcaptakavadhap.), VII, 17, 680, 688, 709: Drona confessed his inability of seizing Yudhishthira if Arjuna were by: the Trigarta king, saying that Arjuna had always injured them, said that they would take an oath that either Arjuna or the Trigartas should be slain. Then they summoned Arjuna to the southern part of the field. Arjuna told Satyajit to guard Yudhishthira, and went out against the Trigartas.- § 592 (do.), VII, 18-32: TWELFTH DAY: 18, 728, 733, 734, 736, 737; 19, 753, 756, 763, 764, 765, 770, 773; 23, 1017; 26, 1130; 27, 1208, 1212, 1219; 28, 1232, 1234, 1235, 1241; 29, 1265, 1266, 1274; 30, 1303, 1306, 1312, 1319, 1321, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1328, 1329, 1336, 1339; 32, 1418, 1423, 1426, 1428, 1443: The Samcaptakas rejoiced at the prospect of fighting with A., who terrified them with the sound of Devadatta, and attacked them; Subāhu and Suçarman, etc. (a), fought with A.; they fled to Duryodhana, but, urged by the Trigarta king, they once more returned to the field with the Narayana cowherds. Kṛshṇa conveyed Arjuna to the Samçaptakas. The Nārāyanas fought with Arjuna. A. blew the Devadatta and employed the Tvashtra weapon, that confounded the foes, who began to strike each other; Arjuna crossed the Lalitthas, etc.  $(\beta)$ , and used the Vayavya weapon to frustrate the downpour of arrows shot by his foes, and Vayu bore away crowds of Samcaptakas with their stoods, etc. Yudhishthira disposed his troops in the form of a semicircle. Yudhishthira fled. Arjuna's son Crutakīrti fought with the son of Duhçasana. A., etc. (v), fought with Bhagadatta (upon his elephant). Urgod by Arjuna, Krshna began to proceed against Bhagadatta; the Samcaptakas (14,000, including 10,000 Gopālāh or Nārāyaṇāh) challenged Arjuna, and he encountered them, discharged the Brahma weapon, defeated and slew them, and then turned against Bhagadatta; but as Suçarman with his brothers followed him from behind, he again attacked Suçarman, and then again Bhagadatta; Bhagadatta, at last, consecrated his hook with mantras so as to become the Vaishnava weapon; Krshna received it on his breast, and it became a garland. As A. taxed Krshna for fighting himself, Krshna related the history of the Vaishnavastra (c); "the great Asura has now been divested of that supreme weapon; now slay Bhagadatta, that enemy of the gods, just as I formerly slew the Asura Naraka for the good of the worlds"; A. then slew both Bhagadatta and the elephant. Then A. slew the two brothers Vrsha and Acala. Dhrtarashtra's sons attacked Arjuna, and Çakuni employed magics in order to confound him and Kṛshṇa: producing clubs, etc., and asses, etc., which A. slew with celestial weapons; then darkness, whence harsh voices were heard; this A. dispelled with the weapon Jyotishka; then waves of water, which were dried up with the Aditya weapon; Cakuni fled. A. slaughtered the Kuru army: some followed Drona, others Duryodhana; a fierce battle took place on the southern side between Arjuna and the Kurus. The Pandavas regretted that Arjuna was engaged on the southern part of the field in slaughtering the Samcaptakas and the Nārāyana force. Having slain the Samcaptakas, Arjuna fought with Drona, etc., employing the Agneya weapon; A. slew three of Karna's brothers  $(\gamma\gamma)$ . At sunset the armies retired.—§ 593 (Abhimanyuvadhap.), VII, 33-51: THIRTEENTH DAY: 33, 1456, 1466, 1468; 35, 1520, 1521; 36, 1545; 40, 1661; 45, 1824; 51, 1989, 1991: Being overcome by A., and Drona having failed to seize Yudhishthira, the Kurus were regarded as defeated; they heard everybody praise A. and Krshna. Next morning Duryodhana blamed Drona for not having seized Yudhishthira; Drona said that nobody could defeat the force protected by Arjuna and Krshna, save Mahadeva. The Samcaptakas challenged Arjuna and took him away to the southern side of the field. The Pandavas were headed by Bhimasena. Abhimanyu defeated all the warriors that encountered him with the weapons he had received from Arjuna and Kr-hna. At last Abhimanyu was slain by Duhçāsana's son, after Jayadratha had checked those who tried to follow Abhimanyu.- § 595 (do.), VII, 71, 2465: Vyāsa consoled Yudhishthira, who became free from grief; but "what shall we say to Arjuna?" -- § 596 (Pratijñāp.), VII, 72-81: 72, 2485, 2537, 2562, 2563; 73, 2581, 2610; 74, 2636, 2637; 75, 2666, 2667, 2672; 76, (2679), 2704; 77, 2716; 78, 2774; 79, 2775, 2787, 2790, 2791, 2795, 2799, 2801, 2803, 2808; 80, 2842, 2868, 2872, (2874), 2885; 81, 2889, 2895, 2905, 2909: In the evening Arjuna, after having slain large numbers of Samcaptakas, proceeded towards his tent and told Krshna that his heart was afflicted; he saw indications of disaster; Abhimanyu did not come out with smiles to receive him, etc. He remembered that Drona had this day formed the circular array, which none save Abhimanyu could break; but he had not taught him how to come out of it after having pierced it; he had heard the leonine shouts of the Dhartarashtras, and Kṛshṇa hal heard Yuyutsu censuring them for having slain a child instead of Arjuna, and then Yuyutsu had cast up his weapons afflicted with rage and grief. Kṛṣḥṇa consolea Arjuna, talking about the kshattriya duties and heaven. None save Krshna and Yudhishthira (who were always acceptable to him) could address Arjuna. Yudhishthira addressed him and told (VII, 72) him the particulars of Abhimanyu's heroism and fall. Arjuna vowed to slay Jayadratha before the sun set the following day (his oath); even as to As., D., men, birds, snakes, P., wanderers of the night, B.-r., and D.-r., etc., he said that they would not succeed in protecting him, even if he entered Rusātala, or ascended the firmament, or repaired to the city of the gods ( Devapuram) or the city of Diti ( Ditch puram); if the sun set before he had slain him, he would himself enter the fire. Arjuna bent the Gandiva, Krshna blew the Pancajanya, Arjuna the Devadatta (VII, 73). Having been informed by spies, Jayadratha was overwhelmed with sorrow and fear, thinking that not even Drona (a), not even D., G., As., U., Rā., could protect him against Arjuna. He wished to return home. Duryodhana comforted him saying that he, Karna, etc. (B), would protect him. Accompanied by Duryodhana, Jayadratha that very night repaired to Drona and questioned him about the difference between himself and Arjuna. Drona said they had got the same instruction, but Arjuna was superior to Jayadratha in consequence of yoga and the hard life he had led; Drona would, however, protect him, forming an impenetrable array; and, moreover, death ought not to be an object of terror to him (VII, 74). Krshna remonstrated with A. for his rash vow; the Kurus had expected an attack by A.; now they would protect Jayadratha (who had mentioned A.'s encounter with Civa, Hiranyapura, etc.): Kurna, etc. (~). would be in Jayadratha's van; Drona's array would be half a cakata and half a lotus with a needle-mouthed array in the middle (VII, 75). A. assured Kṛshṇa of his competence to accomplish his vow, notwithstanding Drona, Sa., R., V., A., M., with Indra, V.-D., D., P., G., Garuda, etc., by means of the Gandiva and the weapons he had obtained from Yama, etc. (ô) (VII, 76). The gods, including Indra, became very anxious. Sinister omens appeared in nature. Krshna went to A.'s abode and consoled Subhadra (mentioning the kshattriya duties, etc., and revenge) (VII, 77). Subhadra bewailed Abhimanyu, and said "Shame on Bhīmasena, etc. (c)," because they had not protected him. Draupadi and Uttara came to her, lamenting, Krshna said that Abhimanyu had attained the most laudable Then he returned to A. (VII, 78). and enviable goal. A. performed his usual nightly sacrifice to Civa. Krshna with Daruka repaired to his own tent. None in the Pandava camp slept that night, thinking of A. In the middle of the night Kṛshṇa said to Dāruka that he had resolved to fight the next day [if necessary]; he must equip his chariot, placing Kaumodaki, etc., on it, making room for Garuda, and yoking Balahaka, etc. (ζ), to it; when hearing Pancajanya emitting the shrill Rshabha note, he should come to Kṛshṇa (VII, 79). A. saw Kṛshna in a dream, who told him not to grieve, and mentioned the Paçupata weapon (with which Civa slew all the Daityas in battle); if he remembered it now, he would be able to slay Jayadratha next day; otherwise he must pray to Civa. At the Brahma hour A. saw himself sojourning through the sky (Himavat, Manimat, frequented by Si. and Ca., etc. (1)), with Krshna, to where Civa was seated with Parvati (description) (0); Krshna and A. praised Mahadeva (VII, 80). A. beheld the offerings that Civa made every night to Krshna, and he mentally adored both Krshna and Civa. Civa told them to bring Civa's bow and arrow from a lake of amrta. In the lake they saw two terrible snakes; when they had uttered the Brahma Catarudriya, the snakes assumed the forms of a bow and arrow; from Civa's body there came out a brahmacarin with blue throat and red locks, and having showed A. the use of the bow and arrow and the mantras, he sped these weapons to that same lake. Having thus once more obtained the Pacupata weapon, A. and Krshna came back to their own camp (VII, 81) .-§ 597 (do.), VII, 82-84: FOURTEENTH DAY: 83, 2958, 2969, 2970; 84, 2975, 2977, 2982, 2983, 2995, 2998: Yudhishthira underwent his morning rites (very copious description); Kṛshṇa visited Yudhishthira (VII, 82). Then also Virata, etc. (a), arrived. Yudhishthira asked Krshna to rescue the Pandavas, quoting Narada. Krshna assured Yudhishthira of Arjuna's success (VII, 83). A. came and acquainted Yudhishthira with his dream, then he and Krshna and Yuyudhana (these two on one chariot) set out for A.'s pavilion. Krshna equipped A.'s chariot (which had previously been sanctified with mantras), which A. circumambulated with his bow and arrow in hand. A., Yuyudhana, and Krshna mounted the chariot. Many and auspicious omens appeared. A. charged Yuyudhana to protect Yudhishthira in his absence (only he or Pradyumna was able to do it). Yuyudhana proceeded to Yudhishthira (VII, 84) .- § 598 (Jayadrathavadhap.), VII, 85-88: 85, 3047, 3053, 3056; 86, 3082; 87, 3095:

The warriors of Drona shouted in anger "where is A.?" etc. (1). After the Rudra-hour had set in. A. made his appearance, while omens appeared in nature. Durmarshana (Dhartarashtra) took up his position in the van in order to oppose A. A. was at the very van of his army. Krshna and A. blew their conchs. The Kuru army was afraid (VII, 88) .- § 599 (do.), VII, 89-152: FOURTEENTH DAY: 89. 3174, 3180; 90, 3185, 3186; 91, 3230, 3236, 3241, 3242, (3250), 3256, 3259; 92, 3265, 3270, 3272, 3286, 3288, 3294, 3297, 3299, 3301; 93, 3346, 3347, 3366, 3392, 3402, 3405; 94, 3413, 3436, 3446, 3484; 99, 3668, 3674, 3677, 3683, 3684, 3694, 3696, 3697, 3700, (3705), 3720, 3721; 100, 3738, 3743; 101, 3804; 103, 3843, 3847, (3853), 3864, 3873, 3876, 3877, 3879, 3880; 104, 3908, 3913, 3914, 3924; 105, 3954, 3955, 3956, 3963; 106. 3965; 110, 4181, 4198, 4222, 4224, 4233, 4235; 111, 4264, 4265, 4268, 4272, 4274, 4280; 112, 4371; 114, 4467, 4470, 4471, 4473, 4475, 4485; 118, 4700; 119, 4713, 4757; 120, 4758, 4787; 121, 4806; 124, 4991, 5014, 5016; 126, 5110, 5136, 5141; 127, 5191, 5193; 128, 5245; 129, 5279; 130, 5311, 5317, 5338; 131, 5357, 5363; 137, 5629; 139, 5774, 5780, 5810, 5815; 140, 5835, 5841; 142, 5883, 5926, 5928, 5930, 5932, 5933, 5941, 5947; 143, (5967), (5997), 6007; 145, 6056, 6066, 6069, 6085, 6088, 6099, 6103, 6127, 6134, 6139, 6145; 146, 6196, 6204, 6210, 6211, 6252, 6255, 6274, 6288, 6294; 147, 6324, 6386; 148, 6394, 6408, 6418; 149, 6497; 150, 6522; 151, 6535, 6549, 6552, 6576; 152, 6587: A. fought with Durmarshana and caused a terrible carnage (VII, 89); then with Duhçasana, whose division was routed (VII, 90). A. met Drona and asked leave to slay Jayadratha; Drona refused leave and attacked A.; A. avoided him and penetrated into the Kuru army, the Pancala princes Yudhamanyu and Uttamaujas being the protectors of his wheels; he was opposed by Jaya, etc. (a), and the Abhishāhas, etc. (β) (VII, 91). A. employed the Brahma weapon against Drona, avoided him again, fought with Krtavarman and the Kamboja king Sudakshina: Krtavarman provented Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas from following A., who did not slay Krtavarman. Crutayudha (b) attacked A. and was slain by Krshna. Then A. slew Sudakshina; all the troops fled away (VII, 92). A. slew the Abhīshāhas, etc.  $(\gamma)$ , and slew Crutayus and Acyutayus with the Aindra weapon, and then their sons Niyatayus and Dîrghayus. 4. caused a great carnage among the Angas (on elephants), the Kalinga king, etc. (on elephants), the Mlecchas, Yavanas, etc. (δ); A. slew the Ambastha king Crutayus (VII, 93). Drona acknowledged his inability to oppose Arjuna, clad Duryodhana in invulnerable armour and urged him to oppose A. Duryodhana and the Trigartas, etc., proceeded towards the chariot of A. (VII, 94). A. and Krshna steadily proceeded towards Jayadratha (description). A. slew Vinda and Anuvinda. While Krshna led Arjuna's steeds, A. on foot kept the whole Kuru army in check, and piercing the earth with a weapon made a lake for his steeds to drink from and a hall of arrows for them to rest within; Nārada came to see the lake (VII, 99). Si. and Ca., etc., applauded (VII, 100). The progress of Arjuna (with Kṛshṇa) became irresistible. Duryodhana (VII, 101) fought with Arjuna (VII, 102), who had also got the same invulnerable armour from Indra; A. shot terrible shafts consecrated with mantras at Duryodhana; this weapon could not be used again lest it should slay A. himself; A. deprived Duryodhana of his chariot, steeds, and weapons; when Kṛshņa blew the Pānca-janya and A. bent the Gandiva, the Kurus fell down on the ground. The protectors of Jayadratha attacked Krshna and A. (VII, 103). A. fought Bhūricravas, etc.  $(\mu)$ , (and blew the Devadatta), Duryodhana, Açvatthaman (VII, 104), and slew many chariot-warriors. A.'s standard bore the sign of an ape with fierce face and tail like that of the lion ( $\nu$ ) (VII, 105). Yudhishthira heard the blare of Pancajanya and thought A. to be in distress; he requested Sātyaki to go to A. and bring him intelligence of his safety; A. had said in the Dvaita wood to Yudhishthira, "even if Krshna, etc. (σ), assists us, I shall yet appoint Satyaki for our aid, since there is none equal to him," and Yudhishthira had witnessed his reverence for A. at Dvaraka, after his return from the tirthas, etc.; "the day is about to end"; Pradyumna and Satyaki are equal to A. in bravery (VII, 110). Sātyaki hesitated to comply with Yudhishthira's request on the ground of a counter-command by A.; "the Sauvīrakas, etc. (7), D., As., men, Ra., K., M.-U., etc., cannot cope with A. in battle" (VII, 111). Sätyaki agreed to obey Yudhishthira's order; "the distance from here is 3 yojanas"; he would crush the elephants of the Anjana breed mounted by Mlecchas (named Rukmarathas), who at Karna's command had returned from the pursuit of A. and were waiting for Sātyaki, and likewise crush those 700 elephants mounted by Kirātas (c) and formerly given by the Kirāta king to A. (VII, 112). Yuyudhāna proceeded towards the chariot of A. (VII, 120). Yudhishthira was anxious because he had not obtained any news of A. and Satyaki, and thought of sending Bhīma after Sātyaki; Bhīma penetrated to Arjuna, making his presence known by a roar; A. and Krshna uttered loud roars in return; Yudhishthira understood that all was safe, and recalled A,'s feats  $(\pi\pi)$  (VII, 128). A, bent the Gandiva, and Krshna blew the Pancajanya (VII, 129). Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas proceeded towards A. (VII, 130). Bhima was attacked by Karna; Kṛshṇa and A. became anxious for Bhīma (VII, 132). Bhīma gladdened A., etc.  $(\psi\psi)$  (VII, 136). Bhīma's weapons being exhausted, he fled away from Karna and defended himself with the bodies of the elephants slain by A.; but, recollecting A.'s vow, he did not take the life of Karna; and Karna, recollecting his promise to Kuntī, did not take the life of Bhīma; A. then turned Karņa and then Açvatthaman to flight (VII, 139). Satyaki slew the steeds of Duhçāsana, gladdening A. and Krshna (VII, 140). Sätyaki approached A., who was anxious for Yudhishthira (etc) (VII, 141). As Sātyaki succumbed to Bhūricravas. A, urged by Krshna, cut off one of the arms of Bhuricravas (VII, 142). Bhūricravas rebuked A.  $(\eta\eta\eta)$ ; A. justified his conduct (000). Bhūricravas (d) desired to die in prāya (description); he acknowledged the justice of A.'s plea, and was blossed by Krshna and A. (a). Though forbidden by Krshna, etc. (KKK), Sātyaki slew Bhūricravas sitting in prāya (VII, 143). A. proceeded to Jayadratha's chariot; Duryodhana, etc.  $(\mu\mu\mu)$ , encountered A. Duryodhana prevailed upon Karna to protect Jayadratha (vvv); A. deprived Karna of his steeds, chariot, and charioteer. A. invoked the Varuna weapon and caused a great carnage (VII, 145). A. employed the Aindra weapon, etc. (description). A. cut off Jayadratha's standard and slew his charioteer; Jayadratha was put into their centre by six chariot-warriors. Krshna covered the sun by means of his yoga power, so that all, except A., thought the sun to have set, and he urged A. to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay; A. caused such a carnage that the warriors abandoned Jayadratha in fear and fled away; Krshna again urged A. to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay, telling him about the curse of Jayadratha's father Vrddhakshattra (g), who was still engaged in penances outside Samantapuñcaka; therefore A. should make the head fall upon the lap of Vrddhakshattra himself, lest A.'s head should crack into 100 pieces; this A. did, and as the head fell down from Vrddhakshattra's lap the latter's head split into 100 pieces. Krshna then withdrew the darkness he had created; Krshna and A. blew their conchs, etc.; A. fought with many mighty chariot-warriors (VII. 146): Krpa (at whose death-like swoon A. grieved), Acvathaman (who fled), Karna; Krshna told A. to avoid Karna, because the latter was still in possession of the lance that Indra had given him. "In this world there are only three mighty archers, Krshna, A., and Satyaki," said Sanjaya (VII, 147). Bhima tried to induce A. to permit him to slay Karna; A. vowed to slay Karna's son Vrshasena in his presence. Krshna congratulated A. (φφφ), who attributed the victory to Krshna; Krshna pointed out to A. the results of that day's battle Krshna and A. congratulated Yudhishthira (VII, 148).  $(\psi\psi\psi)$  (VII, 149). A fierce battle ensued (VII, 152).— § 600 (Ghatotkacavadhap.), VII, 153-183: THE NIGHT COMBAT AFTER THE FOURTEENTH DAY: 159, 7024, 7044, 7049, 7107; 164, 7325, 7346, 7350; 165, 7371; 167, 7479, 7502, 7503, 7505, 7508; 170, 7660, 7661; 171, 7704, 7705, 7706, 7707, 7709; 172, 7760; 181, (8213); 182, 8275; 183, 8298: A dreadful battle took place between the Pancalas and the Kauravas (VII, 153); A., etc. (B), fought with Drona (VII, 154); do.; Duryodhana urged Çakuni to proceed against A. together with Karna, etc. (\*) (VII, 156). Drupada's division, which fled before Drona, was rallied by A. and Bhīma, followed by the Kaikayas, etc. ( $\sigma$ )-(VII, 167). Karna vowed to slay A., etc. (v) (VII, 158). Acvatthāman, etc.  $(\beta\beta)$ , fought with A, in order to rescue Karna; A, slew the steeds and driver of Karna, etc.; Duryodhana fought with A.; Krpa urged Acvatthaman to proceed against A.; he made Daryodhana desist from an encounter with A. (VII, 159). A. slew the Yaudheyas, etc. ((); the Pancales fled, but were rallied by Bhima and A.; the Kauravas fled (VII, 161). Krshna told Yudhishthira not to fight with Drona, he should go to Duryodhana, A., and Bhīma (VII, 162). Duryodhana commanded his troops to take up lighted lamps and torches (VII, 163). "Karna will vanquish A., etc.," said Drona; A. fought against the Kauravas (VII, 164). Alambusha fought with A. (VII, 165). A. vanquished Alambusha and attacked Drona (VII, 167). A new battle ensued (description) (VII. 169); the Gandiva and the rattle of A.'s chariot were heard; Duryodhana despatched Çakuni against A. (VII, 170). A. deprived Cakuni of his chariot, etc.; Krshna and A. blew their conchs (VII, 171). The Pandava host fled; A. and Krshna rallied the retreating troops  $(\sigma\sigma)$  (VII, 172). Dhrshtadyumna was deprived of his chariot by Karna, and ascended the chariot of A. A. and Krshna and Yudhishthira conversed about Karna; A. asked Krshna to proceed towards Karna. Krshna said that none except A. and Ghatotkaca could encounter him; but A. must not do it as long as he retained the lance presented by Indra; "but Ghatotkaca will vanquish Karna." They prevailed upon Ghatotkaca to encounter Karna (77) (VII, 173). Ghatotkaca slew Alambusha and fought with Karna (VII, 174). Krshna urged A. to proceed in Bhima's wake and resist Drona's division (VII, 177). A. shot many Kshattriyas (VII, 178).

Karna slew Ghatotkaca with his celestial dart (VII, 179). Krshna with transports of dolight embraced A., because Karna's dart could no more kill A. (VII, 180). Kṛshṇa's policy was the reason why Karna had never hurled the fatal dart at A. (VII, 182). - § 601 (Dronavadhap.), VII, 184-185: CONTINUATION OF THE NIGHT AFTER THE FOURTEENTH DAY: 184, 8395; 185, 8431, 8440, 8441, 8445, 8448, 8449: A. granted permission to the warriors to sleep. D., R., and soldiers applauded A.; all the combatants lay down on the field to sleep (description); the Kaurava troops blessed A. for his act of kindness. When the moon rose, both hosts rose from sleep and again prepared for battle (VII, 184). Drona described the extent of A.'s might and prowess ( $\gamma$ ); Duryodhana vowed that he would slay A. that day. Drona was of opinion that it was only right that Duryodhana and Çakuni should proceed against A. (VII, 185).—§ 602 (do.), VII, 186-192: FIFTEENTH DAY: 186, 8462, 8465; 187, 8540, 8543; 188, 8597, 8605, 8607, 8608, 8610; 189, 8691; 190, 8701, 8702; 192, 8875: When three-fourths of that night had worn away the battle once more commenced. Urged by Krshna A. moved to the left of Drona and Karna. Bhīma urged A. to put forth all his vigour. A. fought with Drona, Karna, etc. (ζ) (description); he was assisted by Drupada, etc. Soon the morning sun arose (VII, 186). The battle was revived (VII, 187). D., G., R., Si., Aps., Y., and Ra. applauded Drona and A., saying that "this is no human, etc. (μ), but an exalted Brāhma encounter"; both employed the Brahma weapon; the engagement became general (VII, 188). A. attacked the Kurus, and Drona attacked the Pancalas (VII, 189). The Pandavas feared, thinking that A. would not fight with Drona. Krshna told A. to abandon virtue and let some one tell Drona that Acvatthaman had been slain in battle. A. did not approve; others approved, Yudhishthira, however, with great difficulty (VII, 190). A fierce encounter took place between Drona and Dhrshtadyumna; Satyaki rescued Dhrshtadyumna and was applauded by Krshna, A., and Si., etc. (VII, 191). Dhrshtadyumna cut off Drona's head, though forbidden by A. and blamed by everybody (VII, 192).- § 603 (Nārāyanastram.), VII, 193-202: The last part of the fifteenth DAY: 193, 8957, 8958; 195, 9002; 196, 9037, (9054); 197, 9082, 9119, 9123, 9125; 198, 9132; 199, 9246, (9247); 200, 9259, 9267, †9337; 201, 9426, 9429, 9431, 9444, 9479; 202, 9645: Açvatthāman was filled with rage; he said there was none equal to him and A. in knowledge of arms; he had a weapon (the Nārāyana weapon) that neither A., etc. ( $\delta$ ), knew, presented by Nārāyana to his father, with the promise that no man should ever be his equal in battle; only this weapon must never be used in haste, etc., and never be hurled upon persons that abandoned their chariots and weapons in battle, etc.; with this he would rout and slay the Pandavas, etc. (1) (VII, 195). Terrible signs appeared in nature. Yudhishthira spoke about the matter to A. ( $\kappa$ ); A. in reply described the prowess of Acvatthaman and the unrighteousness of the Pandavas in slaying Drona (λ); "all of us have passed the greater parts of our lives; the days that remain to us are few; this exceedingly unrighteous act has stained what is left; . . . I did not interfere, as he was about to be slain; for this fault I have already sunk into hell, overcome with shame" (VII, 196). Bhimasena, reproaching A., vindicated the deed  $(\mu)$  (VII, 197). A. cast oblique glances upon Dhṛshṭadyumna; Dhṛshṭadyumna taunted Sātyaki for the slaughter of Bhūricravas  $(\rho)$ ; Sātyaki would slay Dhrshtadyumna; Dhrshtadyumna asked Bhima to let him slay Satyaki ( $\tau$ ); then he and A, would slay the enemies. Krshna and Yudhishthira restored peace (VII, 198). Açvatthāman invoked the Nārāyana weapon (description). Krshna prevailed upon the troops to lay down their weapons and alight from their chariots; Bhīmasena alone refused to do so. A. said that his vow was that the Gandiva should not be used against the Nārāyaṇa weapon, kine, and brahmans. Bhīma attacked Acvatthaman, but was overwhelmed by the energy of the Näräyana weapon (VII, 199). A. covered Bhīmasena with the Varuna weapon; he and Krshna forcibly brought Bhima down from his chariot, making him abandon his weapons. Then the Narayana weapon became pacified. It could not be used twice. A., etc.  $(\gamma \gamma)$ , fought with Açvatthāman (VII, 200). A. addressed Açvatthaman in harsh words  $(\delta\delta)$ , though A. and Acvatthaman loved each other. Acvatthaman became angry with A. and especially with Krshna, touched water, and invoked the Agneya weapon, the result being sinister omens and a great slaughter in the Pandava army; A. invoked the Brahma weapon; the darkness was dispelled, etc., a full akshauhini of the Pandava troops had been felled; Krshna and A. were unwounded; Açvatthāman lost heart and ran away; he met Vyāsa, who told him the history of Nārāyaṇa (b); "Nara and Nārāyaṇa are A. and Kṛshṇa" (VII, 201). A. met with Vyāsa and inquired of him about the invisible person who aided him in the battle. Vyāsa said that it was Mahādeva himself, and rolated the tale of the sacrifice of Daksha, the destruction of Tripura (d), etc. -§ 604 (Karnap.), VIII, 1-9: THE NIGHT AFTER DRONA'S DEATH, AND THE SIXTEENTH MORNING, AND BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH DAY: 3, 72; 5, 101, 143, 146; 9, 267, 313: The Kurus made Karna their leader; he fought for two days and was then slain by A. (VIII, 1). Sanjaya related to Dhrtarashtra that Karna was made generalissimo and slain by A. on the second day (VIII, 3). -§ 605 (do.), VIII, 10-32: SIXTEENTH DAY: 11, 428; 16, 610, 611, 616, 618, 621, 627, 628, 633, 639, 640, 641, 642; 17, 663, †665, †666, †667, †674, †675, †677, †679, 686; 18, 688, 694, 695, 697, 708; 19, 715, 718, 719, 721, 729, 731, 762; 20, 772, 774; 21, 821, 824; 26, 1053; 27, 1080, 1081; 30, 1217, 1219, 1223, 1227, 1237, 1245; 31, 1249, 1257, 1286, 1289, 1295, 1298, 1311, 1315; 32, 1340, 1344: After Drona's fall the Kauravas fought for a long time with the Pandavas (Arjuna). On the approach of the evening twilight the Kauravas retired to their encampment; they held a consultation in the night; Karna was installed as generalissimo (1) (VIII, 10). Yudhishthira asked A. to array the Pandava army and slay Karna. The Pandava army was arranged after the form of a half-moon, A. in the middle (w); Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas became the protectors of A.'s chariot-wheels (VIII, 11). A. fought with the Samçaptakas (VIII, 13, 16) and Açvatthaman (VIII. 16). The Kalinga, Vanga, and Nishāda heroes attacked A. with a division of elephants, which was broken; Krshna urged A. not to spare Açvatthaman, who was at last borne away by his steeds; Krshna and A. proceeded towards the Samcaptakas (VIII, 17). Urged by Krshna, A. slew the Magadha chief Dandadhara (lord of Girivraja), (on an elephant), and then his brother Danda; A. once more proceeded against the Samcaptakas (VIII, 18), whom he slaughtered; A. slew Ugrāyudha's son; urged by Krahna, A. defeated the remnant of the Samcaptakas in order not to lose any time in slaying Karna (VIII, 19). Krshna said to A. that he did not see Yudhishthira (VIII, 21). A. fought the Trigartas, otc. (λλ), slew king Catrunjaya, and Sucruta's son and Candradeva; king Satyasena wounded Krshna and was slain by A., who then slew Citravarman and Mitrasena, etc., and wounded Suçarman; all the Samcaptakas attacked A., who invoked the Aindra weapon (description); the hostile army fled away almost entirely (VIII, 27). Karna slaughtered the Pancalas, A. the Trigartas, etc., when the sun had passed the meridian (VIII, 28). In the afternoon A. and Krshna (having said their daily prayers and worshipped Bhava) destroyed the Kurus; A. fought Duryodhana, Acvatthaman, Karna. At the close of the day both armies withdrew; Rā. and Pc., etc., came (VIII, 30). Dhrtarashtra exalted the prowess of A. (oo). Karna assured Duryodhana that he would slav A. next day; at dawn he repeated his pledge: "A. is superior to me only by having Kṛshṇa, the creator of the universe, for his charioteer, the chariot given him by Agni, his steed, and his standard with the ape." He wanted Calya ("who is superior to Kṛshṇa") as his charioteer (VIII, 31).—§ 606 (do.), VIII, 35, 1657: Duryodhana prevailed upon Calya to be Karna's charioteer by relating how Brahman had acted as such to Rudra, and by pointing to the fact that Krshna had become the charioteer of A., and would fight if A. were slain (VIII, 35).—§ 607 (do.), VIII, 36-45: 36, 1688; 37, †1722, †1728, †1735, †1740, †1741, †1745; 38, 1756, 1757, 1758, 1760, 1763, 1766, 1768, 1771, 1774; 39, 1791, †1794, †1796, †1797, 1798, 1806; 40, 1818, 1829; 41, 1958, 1960, 1961; 42, 1962; 45, 2111: When the morning came, Duryodhana prevailed upon Calya to become Karna's charioteer. Karna told Calya to urge the steeds that he might slay A., etc. ( $\beta$ ) (VIII, 36). Karna boasted  $(\gamma)$ ; Calya ridiculed him and praised A. ( $\delta$ ). Karna proceeded on his chariot and inquired after A. (VIII, 37), promising every Pāndava soldier that he who pointed out to him A. would receive whatever wealth he desired (VIII, 38). Calya said that Karna would have a sight of A. without troubling to make a search, and asked him to abandon his desire for a single combat with A. (VIII, 39). Karna said that Krshna and A. were well known to him but did not inspire him with fright; notwithstanding the curse of Paraçu-Rāma he would slay A.; he would employ the Brahma weapon, which A. would never be able to escape, if only the wheels of Karna's chariot did not sink into the earth that day according to the brahman's curse whose homa-cow's calf he had inadvertently struck (VIII, 42).—§ 608 (do.), VIII, 46-96: THE SEVENTEENTH DAY'S BATTLE: 46, 2130, 2132, 2152, 2154, 2161, 2177, 2193, 2197, 2199, 2201, 2206; 47, 2212, 2217, 2219; 50, 2415, 2421; 53, 2574, 2598, 2604; 56, 2774, 2784, 2801, 2810, 2828; 57, 2849; 58, 2857, 2858, 2894, 2898, 2903; 59, 2955, 2966, 2970; 60, 3039, 3055, 3063; 61, 3079; 62, 3142; 63, 3198; 64, 3217, 3219, 3223, 3230, 3231, 3240, 3241, 3272; 65, †3292, †3293, †3294, 3307; 66. 3309, 3317, 3335; 68. 3386; 69, (3440), (3470), 3483; 70, 3492, 3515; 71, 3562; 72, 3605, 3615; 73, 3634; 74, 3791, 3803; 76, 3842, 3859, 3860; 77, 3861, 3862, 3874, 3875, 3876, 3878, 3879, 3881; 79, 4004, 4025, 4032, 4037, 4066, 4067, 4068, 4072, 4075, 4085; 80, 4118; 81, 4124, 4145, 4146, 4157, 4159, 4161; 83, 4257; 84, 4301; 85, 4329, 4340, 4847; 86, 4849, (4364); 87, 4883, 4408, 4409, 4415, 4416, 4421, 4423, 4425, 4429, 4430, 4437, 4461, 4462, 4476, 4479; 88, 4505; 89, 4524, 4532, 4533, 4534, 4535, 4536, 4539, 4559, 4591; 90, 4623, 4625, 4626, 4632, 4633, 4635, 4658, 4662, 4664,

(b). A.'s chariot of which Agui Vaicvanara, the first (purvah), the brahmán, Indu (i.e. Soma), had become the steeds, [and] that was originally (prathamam) born from him, [that chariot] the gods and the brahmans knew; which had in days of old borne Brahmán, Içana (i.o. Civa), Indra, and Varuna; riding on that primeval (adyam) chariot, Keçava (i.e. Krshna) and A. now proceeded to battle . . . with white steeds. How the Samcaptakas threatened to slay A., etc.; Calya dissuaded Karna from trying to slay A. (VIII, 48). A. arrayed his troops, headed by Dhrshtadyumna (with steeds white like pigeons); by the side of Dhrshtadyumna were the Draupadeyas. A. fought the Samcaptakas (VIII, 47). A. fought the Samcaptakas, etc.  $(\eta \eta)$ ; A. fought Suçarman; A. repeatedly invoked the Naga weapon, paralyzing the legs (encircled with snakes) of the Samcaptakas; Sucarman invoked the Sauparna weapon; birds came down and devoured the snakes; A. sat down, recovered, and invoked the Aindra weapon; the battle became awful (VIII, 53). A. fought the Samcaptakas; he addressed Krshna upon beholding Karna's (s) prowess, and as the Samcaptakas wore defeated (when the sun had ascended the meridian), A. pierced through the Kuru host. Duryodhana once more urged the Samcaptakas against him. Having slain 10,000 kshattriyas, A. came to the further wing of the Samcaptakas, which was protected by the Kāmbojas; the younger brother of the Kamboja chief Sudakshina was slain by A.; the Kāmbojas, etc. (77), were slain. A. fought Acvatthaman; Si. and Ca. arrived; Krebna urged A. not to spare Acvatthaman, who swooned away and was borne away by his charioteer: A. slaughtered the Kuru troops, etc. (VIII, 56). A. pointed out to Krshna that the Pandava army was fleeing before Karna, and that Yudhishthira was nowhere to be seen; "the third part of the day still remains." A. proceeded to Yudhishthira; Krshna described the field of battle to A.  $(\gamma\gamma)$ . A terrible battle ensued (VIII, 58). A remnant only of the Samcaptakas were left unslaughtered. Dhrshtadyumna was worsted by Acvatthāman and rescued by A.; A. proceeded towards the Samcaptakas (VIII, 59). Krshna pointed out to A. that Yudhishthira was being pursued by many Dhartarashtras and was in great danger; Karna would soon come against A. and was protected by Duryodhana; he should be alain. A. then destroyed the remnant of his foes; the Samcaptakas fled (VIII, 60). A. fought against Acvatthaman (VIII, 61). A. appeared (VIII, 62). Calya exhorted Karna to fight with A., but in vain; he once more reminded Karna of A., etc.  $(\eta\eta)$  (VIII, 63). A. fought with Açvatthaman; Acvatthaman employed the Aindra weapon, which A. neutralized with a mighty weapon created by Indra; at last Acvatthaman was borne away by his steeds. The Srnjayas called upon A. and Krshna. A. spoke to Krshna about Karna; Krshna asked him first to find Yudhishthira (VIII, 64). A. met with Bhīma and asked him to bring intelligence of Yudhishthira; but they agreed that A. should go to Yudhishthira while Bhīma should resist the Samcaptakas. A. and Krshna found Yudhishthira lying on his bed (VIII, 65). A. swore to slay Karna and all the foes that day (VIII, 67). Yudhishthira censured A., thinking that he had run away from the battle leaving Bhīma unsupported (\lambda \lambda \lambda \rangle), several times invoking him to give up the Gandiva to somebody else (VIII, 68). A. drew his sword in order to strike off Yudhishthira's head in fulfilment of his vow regarding the person who would tell him to give up the Gandiva  $(\mu\mu\mu)$ ; Krahna addressed A. on the nature of truth (vvv); A. said he must keep his vow (FFF); Krshna suggested that A., by insulting Yudhishthira, by addressing him with "thou," would be regarded as having slain him (ooo) (VIII, 69). Urged by Krshna, A. insulted Yudhishthira in a long speech  $(\pi\pi\pi)$ ; then he became despondent and desired to cut off his own head; Krshna urged him to utter his own praises, as self-praise was equal to self-destruction. A. praised himself  $(\rho\rho\rho)$  and asked for Yudhishthira's forgiveness, promising to slay Karna and rescue Bhīma. Krshna induced him to forgive both himself and A.  $(\sigma\sigma\sigma)$  (VIII, 70). Speeches of Krshna, A., and Yudhishthira on the same topic (777) (VIII, 71). A. proceeded to slay Karna, having obtained Yudhishthira's leave; Krshna addressed A. in order to raise his spirits (vvv) (VIII, 72); continuation (vvv) (VIII, 73). A.'s cheerful reply to Krshna (サササ) (VIII, 74). Sanjaya related: A. slew many (VIII, 75). Bhima said to his charioteer Viçoka that he was anxious about A. and Yudhishthira; Viçoka pointed out to Bhīma that A. was returning to battle  $(\omega\omega\omega)$  (VIII, 76). A. and Bhīma attacked the Kaurava army (description) (VIII, 77). A. produced a river of blood (description). Requested by A. (5), Krshna brought him to Karna; Duryodhana attacked A.: A. vanquished Açvatthaman, Krpa, and Krtavarman; Çikhandin, etc. (i'), proceeding towards A., checked the foes (VIII, 79). A., avoiding Karna, proceeded to the rescue of Bhīma; he informed Bhīma that Yudhishthira was well; he slew ten sons of Dhytarashtra (VIII, 80). A. was assailed by ninety Samcaptakas as he was proceeding towards Karna's chariot; he slew them; so also many Kauravas and a force of Mlecchas, mounted on 1,300 elephants under the command of Duryodhana. Bhima rushed towards A., and destroyed a small unslaughtered remnant of the Kauravas; then he followed A. in his rear (VIII, 81). Krshna urgod A. to slay Karna; A. proceeded with Bhimasena (VIII, 82). Bhimasena took up a little of Duhçāsana's blood and drank it  $(\mu')$ , addressing Krshna and A., and vowing soon to slay Duryodhana (VIII, 83). Urged by Bhīma and Nakula, A. proceeded towards Vrshasena (VIII, 84). A. slew Karna's son Vrshasena, and threatened to slay Karna, as Bhima would slay Duryodhana; A. attacked Karna (VIII, 85); Krshna addressed A. (7); A.'s reply ( $\nu'$ ) (VIII, 86); description of A. and Karna ( $\phi'$ ); As., Yatudhanas, Gh., etc., sided with Karna; the Vedas, etc.  $(\chi')$ , took the side of A.; the smaller snakes all sided with Karna; V., M., Sā., R., V,-D., A., and Agni, etc.  $(\chi')$ , sided with A., while all  $\bar{A}$ . sided with Karna; the Vaiçyas, etc.  $(\psi')$ , sided with Karna; P., etc.  $(\chi')$ , with A.; the Pretas, Pc., Ra., etc., with Karna; D.-r., B.-r., R.-r., with A., as also G. headed by Tumburu. With the Pradheyas and Mauneyas, G., and Aps., and many wise sages, having wolves for their vehicles, came to witness the encounter that was also witnessed by D., Da., G. N., Y., etc., M.-r., P. (subsisting upon Svadha), etc., and Brahman with B.-r., and Prajapatis, and Bhava. Indra wished that A. should vanquish Karna; Surya, that Karna should vanquish A.; the gods urged Brahman that the success of both should be equal, Indra that A. and Krshna should win; Brahman and Içana (i.e. Civa) said that the victory of A. was certain (w): "let Karna obtain identity with V. or M., let him be worshipped in heaven with Drona and Bhīshma." Indra acquiesced by their words. Description of Karna's and A.'s chariots; the ape on A.'s banner attacked the elephant's rope on Karna's banner. Krshna and Calya darted keen glances at each other, and so did A. and Karna. Calya said that he would slay both Krshna and A. if Karna was slain; Krshna said that Karna could not slay A.; otherwise, the destruction of the universe would be at hand, and he would himself slay Karna and Calya. A. said that that day the wives of Karna would become widows (aa') (VIII, 87). In the welkin D., N., As., Si., Y., G., Rā., Aps., and B.-r., etc., looked on. The battle commenced. A. defeated Duryodhana, etc. (VIII, 88); description of the battle between A. and Karna; A. employed an Agneya weapon, which was neutralized by Karna with a Varuna weapon by means of clouds, which was in its turn dispelled by A. by means of a Vayavya weapon; A. employed the Aindra weapon (? dayitam devarājāah; Mahendrasyāstram), Karna the Bhargava weapon. Seeing A.'s weapons neutralized by Karna, Bhîma (as') and Kṛshṇa (aţ') urged A. to put forth his strength. A. bowed to Brahman and invoked the Brahma weapon, which could be applied by the mind alone; Karna neutralized it; urged by Bhīma, A. applied a second Brāhma weapon, which caused a great carnage among the Kaurava troops (description). A. shot at Karna and Calya and slew Sabhāpati, etc. The Kauravas urged Karna to slav A. Yudhishthira appeared in order to witness the encounter. A.'s bowstring burst; Karna pierced A. (ab'). Karna employed five snakes as arrows; they were out off by A., who slew 2,000 Kurus. The Kurus fled, leaving Karna to fight alone with A. (VIII, 89). The snake Açvasena entered into Karna's quiver in the form of an arrow. Karna and A. were fanned and sprinkled with fragrant sandal-water by many Aps., staying in the welkin, and Çakra and Sürya gently brushed their faces with their hands. Karna aimed that arrow which he had long kept for A.'s destruction. Omens appeared; Karpa did not know that Açvasena had entered his arrow. Krshna with his feet pressed A.'s car about a cubit into the earth and the snakearrow only broke his diadem (made by Svayambhū for Indra > A.); incapable of being crushed by Rudra, etc. (at'). Karna would not shoot the same weapon again. Acvasena then of his own accord came towards A. in the shape of an arrow; Krshna informed A.; A. cut off the snake, and Krshna raised the chariot from the earth. Once, when Karna was stupefied, A. did not wish to slay him, but he was taught by Krshna never to spare an enemy. Karna invoked the Brahma weapon and A. the Aindra weapon, which was neutralized by Karpa; urged by Krshna to shoot "high weapons," A, shot the Brahma weapon. Karna cut off eleven bowstrings of A.'s one after another, not knowing that A. had 100 strings to his bow; urged by Krshna to strike Karna with "superior weapons," A. then consecrated another celestial weapon with mantras, uniting the Raudra weapon with it. At that time the earth swallowed up Karna's wheels. Karna asked A. to wait for a moment till he had raised his sunken wheel (VIII, 90). Krshna urged A. to pierce Karna with a celestial weapon; A. kindled with fury; blasing flames of fire seemed to emanate from all the pores of his body. Both Karns and A. invoked the Brahma weapon; A. shot an Agni weapon, which was neutralized by Karna with the Varuna weapon, spreading darkness in all directions, which A. dispelled with the Vayavya weapon. Pierced by a shaft of Karna's. A. began to reel, etc.; Karna in vain endeavoured to extricate his chariot. Recovering his senses, A. took up an Anjalika weapon. Urged by Krehna, A. cut off Karna's standard, and then struck off Karna's head with an Aujalika weapon (the R. loudly crying out "Peace be to the universe!") (VIII, 91). A. fought the chariots of the Kauravas. A. and Krshna blew their conchs; D., G., men, Ca., M.-r., Y., and M.-U. congratulated A. (VIII, 94). Urged by Krshna  $(a\phi')$ , A. presented himself to Yudhishthira, who greeted A. and Krshna. Yudhishthira, with Krshna and A., came back to the field to have a look at Karna's body (VIII, 96).—§ 609 (Çalyap.), IX, 1-2; 2, 119: Çalya was made the commander of the army (IX, 1). Dhrtarashtra's lament (IX, 2).-§ 610 (do.), IX, 3-7: 3, 143, 150; 4, 207, 208, 234; 5, 251; 7, 351: A. proceeded towards the chariots; he fought with 25,000 foot-soldiers; Cekitana, etc. (x), having slain a large number, A. attacked the rest (IX, 3). The troops passed the night at the foot of Himavat (IX, 6). Krshna said that Calya was equal to Bhishma and superior to A.  $(\chi)$  (IX, 7).--§ 611 (do.), IX, 8-28: The battle of the FORENOON OF THE EIGHTEENTH DAY: 8, 398; 9, 448; 11, 567; 14, 705, 708, 710, 714, 730, 787, 749, 750, 751; 18, 961; 19, 1015; 24, 1325; 25, 1364, 1395; 27, 1471, 1480, 1485: A. went against Krtavarman and the Samcaptakas (IX, 8). A. and Bhimasena stupefied their foes (IX, 9). A., having slaughtered the Samcaptakas, encountered Calya (IX, 10). Duryodhana fought with A. (IX, 11). A, fought with Açvatthaman (IX, 12). A. fought against Açvatthaman and the Trigartas; he destroyed 2,000 cars (IX, 14). The Pandavas (in the very sight of Krshna and A.) were afflicted by the Kurus; A. fought with Krpa and Krtavarman. Yudhishthira said that A. should protect his rear; A. began to slay the Kaurava troops (IX, 16). Yudhishthira slew Calya with a celestial dart (IX, 17). A., etc. ( $\beta\beta$ ), began to slaughter the Madrakas (IX, 18). Also the sons of Dhrtarashtra almost all turned away from the fight at midday; A. fought against the chariots; Duryodhana rallied a small force by a spirited address (\(\zeta\zeta\); the Pandavas, and especially A., rushed against thom (IX, 19). The whole army of Duryodhana fled except Duryodhana (IX, 21). A. (desiring to exterminate the Kurus) addressed Krshna, recounting the loss sustained by the Kurus (vv), and attacked the remnant of the Kuru army, and caused a great slaughter (IX, 24). A. and Bhīma, etc. (oo), slew 3,000 elephants, encompassing the Pandava brothers; A. had afflicted Sanjaya's men; Bhima and A. destroyed the elephants (IX, 25). Krshna urged A. to destroy the remnant of Duryodhana's troops  $(\sigma\sigma)$ ; A. ascended his chariot  $(\tau\tau)$ ; A. fought against Sucarman and Cakuni, the Trigartas, slew Satyakarman, Satyeshu, and the Prasthala ruler Suçarman, and the lattor's thirty-five sons, etc., and then proceeded against the remnant of the Bharata host (IX, 27).—§ 612 (Hradapr.), IX, 29-31: 29, 1568, 1600; 30, 1725: the followers of Cakuni attacked the Pandavas; A. and Bhimasena came to the rescue of Sahadeva; A. slew them. Duryodhana abandoned his slain steed, and fled away without a companion, on foot towards a lake, taking up his mace. The Pandavas with A. baffled the purpose of the Kurus. In Duryodhana's army no great chariot-warrior was alive save Acvatthaman, Krpa, and Krtavarman (IX, 29). When the sun had set, A., etc. (e), started towards the lake (IX, 30). Yudhishthira in vain exhorted Duryodhana to come out from the lake and fight with them (IX, 31).- 613 (Gadāyuddh.), IX, 32-83: 83. 1890, 1921: Yudhishthira (though reproved by Krshna) granted Duryodhana that if he could slay even one of the five Pandavas he would continue king (IX, 32); Bhīmasena undertook to encounter him with the mace (IX, 33).- § 614 (do.), IX, 34: Bala-Rāma (b) came to see the encounter.-§ 615 (do.), IX, 35-65: 58, 3246; 61, 3416; 62, 3474, 3477: According to the proposal of Bala-Rāma, Yudhishthira, with his brothers and Duryodhana, proceeded to Samantapancaka (IX, 55). A. inquires of Krshna about the relative merits of the two combatants. Krshna said that by fighting fairly Bhīma would never succeed in vanquishing Duryodhana. A. struck his own left thigh before the eyes of Bhimasena, who understood the sign and fractured Duryodhana's thigh with his mace (IX, 58). Krshna caused A, to take down the Gandiva and his inexhaustible quivers, and then to dismount; then Krshna also dismounted; the celestial Ape on his standard disappeared, and the chariot (burnt by Drona and Karna with the Brahma weapon) with its steeds, etc., was reduced to ashes. At Krshna's suggestion the Pandavas and Satvaki resolved to pass the night at a spot outside the camp, on the banks of the Oghavati. They then despatched Krahna to Hastinapura in order to pacify the wrath of Gandhari and console her and Dhrtarashtra (IX, 62). Duryodhana induced Krpa to instal Açvatthaman as the Kuru generalissimo; then they took leave of Duryodhana and left him alone (IX, 65).- § 616 (Sauptikap.), X, 1-9: 4, 171; 9, 509: Açvatthaman, Krpa, and Krtavarman murdered all who were present in the Pandava camp during the night. "A. is incapable of being vanquished by D., As., G., Y., and Ra." They went to Duryodhana and informed him; Duryodhana died (X, 9). -§ 617 (Aishīkap.), X, 10-18: 10, 550; 13, 652 (satyakarmā); 14, 670, 671; 15, 695, 696, 706: The Pandavas with Krshna proceeded in the track of Bhīmasena and Nakula in pursuit of Acvatthaman: Krahna, A., and Yudhishthira on Kṛshṇa's chariot. Açvatthāman shot a celestial weapon "for the destruction of the Pandavas" (X, 13). Urged by Kṛshṇa, A. shot the [Brāhma] weapon. Extraordinary omens appeared in nature; Nārada and Vyāsa, seeking to save the three worlds, stood between the two fires (X, 14). A. withdrew his weapon, but Açvatthaman could not. Vyasa praised A. for not having used the Brahmaçiras weapon before (X, 15). Krshna said that Uttara's son Parikshit would be stillborn, but be brought to life by Krshna, etc. Acvatthaman's gem was placed upon Yudhishthira (X, 16).—§ 618 (Jalapradanikap.), XI, 1-15: 15, 412: Dhṛtarashṭra resolved to visit the field of battle accompanied by the Kuru ladies (XI, 10). Yudhishthira and his brothers set out to meet Dhrtarashtra, accompanied by Krshna, etc. (x); they met the weeping ladies on the way  $(\lambda)$ , and saluted Dhrtarashtra, who reluctantly embraced Yudhishthira and broke an iron statue of Bhīma (XI, 12). Commanded by Dhrtarashtra, the Pandava brothers proceeded with Krshna to see Gandhari (XI, 14). A. moved away to the rear of Krshna (XI, 15).—§ 619 (Strivil.), XI, 16-25: 18, 540; 23, 660; 24, 684, 696: With the Pandavas and Krshna and all the Kuru ladies Dhrtarashtra proceeded to the field of battle. The Pancala and the Kuru ladies were plunged into unutterable distress (description). Gändhäri pursed Krshna. - § 620 (Çrāddhap.), XI, 26-27: 27, 807: Urged by Dhrtarashtra, Yudhishthira ordered Sudharman, etc. (a), to cause the funeral rites of the slain  $(\beta)$  to be duly performed; they burnt them upon funeral pyres. Then Yudhishthira and Dhrtarashtra proceeded towards the Ganga (XI, 26). The Kuru ladies, etc., performed the water rites for their fallen kinsmen on the Ganga. Kunti, in a paroxysm of grief, disclosed to her sons the truth about the birth of Karpa ( $\gamma$ ), whom A. had slain, being in reality his brother (XI, 27). - § 621 (Rājadh.): XII, 1, 13, 34, 36, 39; 2, 47, 55; 7, 158 (Yudhishthira's lament before A.); 8, 201, (203) (A. addressed Yudhishthira, justifying the battle and applauding the acquisition of wealth, quoting Nahusha, etc.); 9 (unmoved by A.'s words, Yudhishthira desired to lead the life of a religious recluse).—§ 622 (do.), XII, 11, (305), (331): A. recited the story of the discourse between Cakra (in the form of a golden bird) and certain youths (R.) desirous of leading a forest life.—§ 623 (do.), XII, 12, 333; 15, 424, (425): A. applauded [him who wields] the rod of chastisement; 16, 482.—§ 624 (do.), XII, 18, 535, (536), (571): A. recited the story of the discourse between the Videha king Janaka and his queen, in which the latter explained the claims of a life of poverty and renunciation.—§ 625 (do.): XII, 19, 579, 595: Yudhishthira's reply to A. on the vanity of wealth.-§ 627 (do.): XII, 22, 636 (A. justified before Yudhishthira the slaughter of foes in battle, citing Indra).— § 629 (do.), XII, 25: Seeing A. angry, Yudhishthira declared to Vyasa that earthly rule could not give him any delight. -§ 630 (do.), XII, 27, 809 (Yudhishthira's reply to A. approving a life of yoga and austorities).—§ 632 (do.), XII, 29, (894), 897: A. asked Krshna (who from his earliest years was dearer to Yudhishthira than even A. himself) to dispel Yudhishthira's grief.—§ 635 (do.), XII, 33, 1175; 37. 1377: Directed by Nārada to apply to Bhīshma for instruction and exherted by Jishnu (Arjuna), etc.  $(\gamma)$ , Yudhishthira with his brothers, etc., headed by Dhrtarashtra, set out for Hästinapura. The procession described  $(\delta)$ : A. held a white umbrella of great effulgence, etc., over his head. 38, 1396: The citizens welcomed Yudhishthira and Draupadī and A., etc. (6). Yudhishthira entered the palace; the brahmans slew Carvaka with their yells.—§ 637 (do.), XII, 40a, 1445: Bhīma and A. sat one on each side of Yudhishthira at his installation on the throne.  $41\beta$ , [1479: A. was appointed to resist hostile forces and chastise the wicked]; 448, 1517, 1524 (obtained the palace of Dulicasana), 1530 (Caurin and Sătyaki entered the palace of A.); 47, [1694 (Yudhishthira and A. went in one chariot to see Bhīshma, together with Krshna) ]. -- | § 638 (do.), XII, 48: Krshna and the Pandavas, etc., proceeded to Kurukshetra (description). ]-§ 639 (do.), XII, [50: The Pandavas and Krshna, etc., descended from their chariots and approached and saluted the R., who surrounded Bhishma on his arrow-bed]. 52e: The Pandavas, etc., returned to Hästinapura after having saluted Bhishma]; 53, [1910 (Yudhishthira asked A. to see that his chariot was made ready)], 1914 (the Pāndavas proceeded towards Krshna's abode; the princes set out to see Bhīshma), [having come to Bhīshma, they alighted from their chariots]. — § 640 (do.), XII, 54a, 1929 (the Pandavas asked Bhishma to discourse on morality).—§ 654 (Apaddh.), XII, 157, 5874 ("the 18 akshauhinis were not equal in might to the single-handed A.").—§ 657 (do.), XII, 167, (6220) (A. assigned precedence to Wealth, not to Virtue and Desire). — § 717 (Narayanīya), XII, 342. (13133), 13136, 13186: Vaicampāyana related what Krshna had said to A., when the latter asked him about the signification of his names mentioned by M.-r. in the Vedas and Puranas. 343, (13188), 13238, (13277): Asked by A.

about the identical origin of Agni and Soma, Krshna (in prose) related some ancient stories about the gods, etc.; asked by A. about the battle between Rudra and Narayana, Krshna related some particulars thereof: "that being, whom, at the time of all the battles, thou beheldst stalking in thy van, is no other than Rudra . . . . those foes whom thou hast alain, were all, in the first instance, slain by him." 349. 13554: When the Pandava and Kuru armies were drawn up for the battle and A. became distressed, Krshna himself explained the religion of Devotion . . . . Partha put that question to Narada in the midst of R. and in the presence of Krshna and Bhishma.—§ 734 (Anuçasanik.), XIII, 26, 1759: Bhīshma had been overthrown in battle by A.: he was lying on a bed of arrows in expectation of the time of death; the Pandavas, etc., waited upon him, while he answered their questions relating to morality and righteousness.—§ 777 (Svargāroh. p.), XIII, 169a, 7771: When they burnt the corpse of Bhishma, Bhimasena and A. held a couple of Yak-tails of pure white in their hands; then the Pāndavas, etc., proceeded to Gangā, where they offered oblations of water to Bhīshma; Gangā wept; Kṛshna comforted her: he declared that Bhishma had not been slain by Cikhandin, but by A.- § 781 (Acvamedh.), XIV, 15, 396, 399, 406: Asked by Janamejaya what Krshna and A. did when the Pandavas had reconquered and pacified their kingdom, Vaicampayana said that Krshna comforted A. for the death of his relatives (a) and then wished to go to Dvaravati; A. sorrowfully assented.—§ 782 (Anugītāp.), XIV, 16, 407, 410: When Krshna and A., after slaying the enemies, dwelt in the palace, A. asked Krshna to repeat the contents [of the Bhagavadgītā], because he would soon repair to Dvārakā. Krshna was discontented that A. could not remember it; he now, however, recited what the brahman Kācyapa had heard from a brahman crowned with ascetic success about JIva (the individual Soul), etc. (i.e. Anugītā). — § 782b (Brahmanagītā), XIV, 34, (932): When Krshna had finished the Brahmanagita, A. asked where that brahmani and that brahman were now; Krshna said: "My mind (manae) is the brahman, my understanding (buddhi) is the brāhmanī; he who has been called kehetrajna, I am myself." —§ 782 (Anugītāp.), XIV, 35, (934): Asked by A. about Bráhman, Krshna recited the old history about the discourse between the preceptor and his disciple on this subject (Guruçishyasamvāda). 51, (1470): Asked by A., Krshna said that he was the preceptor and the mind his pupil; "I wish to see my father again with thy leave"; A. replied: "We shall go to-day from this town to Hastinapura and inform Yudhishthira." - § 783 (do.), XIV, 52: Krshna and A. set out for Hastinapura; A. praised Krshna, "the soul of the universe, etc."; they saw Dhrtarashtra, etc. (7); Krahna passed the night in the apartment of A.; at morning they proceeded to Yudhishthira; then they set out from Hastinapura with Subhadra, etc.; A. returned.—§ 784 (do.), XIV, 53: A. repeatedly embraced Krshna; as he came upon the desert he beheld Utanka.—§ 785 (do.), XIV, 62: Vyāsa came and predicted to Prtha, Uttara, A., and Yudhishthira that the son of Uttara would become a great prince through the puissance of Krshna and Vyasa; A. became comforted. 63, 1874, 1887: Yudhishthira summoned all his brothers, and spoke to them about performing the horse-sacrifice, and about obtaining the wealth of Marutta; Bhimasena proposed to worship Civa; A., etc., approved. 64: The Pandavas, etc., set out for the gold of Marutta. 65: They made offerings to Civa, etc.: then they again set out for Hästinapura. 66: Meanwhile Kṛshṇa, etc., arrived; Uttarā gave birth to Parikshit, who was still-born. 67, 1969: Subhadra lamented (v). 68: Krshna entered the lying-inroom (description). 69: Krshna touched water and withdrew the Brahma-weapon and revived the child. 70: When Parikshit was a month old, the Pandavas came back with the wealth. 71, 2081: A., etc.  $(\rho)$ , would officiate at Yudhishthira's sacrifice. 72, 2105: According to the counsel of Vyāsa, A. was charged with the protection of the horse. 73, 2115, 2139: Yudhishthira asked A. to spare all hostile kings as much as possible and to invite them to the horsesacrifice; A. with the Gandiva followed the horse; all Hāstinapura came out to see him; a disciple of Yājiiavalkya followed him in order to perform auspicious rites for him, and also many brahmans and kshattriyas. In course of the horse's wandering many great and wonderful battles were fought. The horse wandered over the whole earth; from the North it turned to the East; myriads of kings fought with A., because they had lost their kinsmen on the field of Kurukshetra, the same did innumerable Kirātas, Yavanas, Mlecchas, and Aryas. 74: The Trigartas attacked A., who in vain asked them to forbear; the Trigarta king Süryavarman fought with A., who slew his younger brother Ketuvarman; then he fought Dhrtavarman, was wounded in his hand and dropped the Gandiva, but took it up again and slew eighteen warriors; the Trigartas fled and accepted A.'s dominion. 75, 2188, 2190: In Prāgjyotisha, Bhagadatta's son king Vajradatta (description) attacked A. on his elephant, but, after a fierce battle—76, 2195, 2197, 2207, 2208, 2209 during three days, he on the fourth day had his elephant slain. and promised to come to the horse-sacrifice. 77: The Saindhavas scated on chariots attacked A., who was on foot, recollecting Jayadratha; omens appeared; the Gandiva fell down; the gods, etc., shouted "victory" to .4., who once more used his bow; the Saindhavas fled. 78, 2265, 2273, 2280: The Saindhavas once more rallied; A. urged them to surrender, but in vain: then Dubcala, taking her grandson, the son of Suratha, in her arms, repaired to A.; A. cast off his bow, and asked after Suratha (the son of Jayadratha); she said that he had died from sorrow when he heard of A.'s arrival; A. comforted her; Duhçalā asked her warriors to desist, and returned home; at last the horse arrived at Manipura-79. 2338—where Babhruvahana, A.'s son by Citrangada, approached A. with humility; A. angrily blamed him for having fallen away from kshattriya duties. Ulūpī pierced through the earth and beheld her [step-]son standing distressed, and incited him to fight A., which he did; he even caused the sacrificial horse to be seized; gravely wounded, A. praised his son highly; at last A. fell down in a swoon, and so did Babhruvāhana. 80, 2371: Citrāngadā lamented. At last Ulupi thought of the gem that has the virtue of reviving a dead man; the gem came; she placed it on the breast of A.; he revived. 81, (2402): Asked by A., Ulūpī recited the curse of the Vasus for A.'s having slain Bhīshma in unfair fight; if A. had died without having expiated his sin, he would have fallen into Hell; A. highly approved of her deed and told Babhruvahana to come with his mother, etc., to the horse-sacrifice; Babhruvahana promised to come and to take upon himself the task of distributing food among the brahmans. He asked A. to pass the night in the city with his two wives; but A. was prevented by his vow of following the horse. 82, 2456, 2462: The horse at last turned its face towards Hastinapura; at Rajagrha, the Magadha king Meghasandhi, the son of Sahadeva, mounted on his chariot, attacked A., who was on foot; he was told to come to the horse-sacrifice. In Vanga, Pundra, and Koçala A. vanquished innumerable Mleccha armies. 83: A. proceeded towards the south. At the beautiful city of the Cedis, Carabha, the son of Cicupala, fought A. and then worshipped him, etc. Citrangada was vanquished by A.; the Nishada king, the son of Ekalavya, was vanquished after a furious battle, etc. King Ugrasena came to A. with Vasudeva. Then along the coast of the western ocean; then to the Gandharas, where a flerce battle ensued with the Gandhara king, the son of Cakuni. 84, 2491: At last the king, disregarding A.'s peaceful advice, fought alone; A. shot off his headgear; the mother of the king came out and forbade her son to fight; A. told him to come to the horse-sacrifice. 85, 2511: At the news of his arrival to Hastinapura, Yudhishthira rejoiced, etc., and made magnificent preparations for the sacrifice. 86, 2559: Krshna, etc., came and told about A. that he had been very much emaciated, and that he was near at hand. 87, 2587, 2592, 2593: Yudhishthira enquired of Krshna why A. was fated to bear such hardships in life; Krshna attributed it to the elevation of A.'s cheekbones. Bhimasena, etc., became gratified with A.'s triumphs. A messenger announced the arrival of A.. and received large gifts. On the second day A. entered the city (description). A. saluted Yudhishthira, etc. 88: The sacrifice was duly performed; 89, 2655.—§ 786 (do.), XIV, 91, 2814: "Yudhishthira, Bhīma, and A. resembled Indra." - § 787 (Açramavāsap.), XV, 1: For fifteen years the Pandavas did everything under the advice of Dhrtarashtra; Bhimasena alone did not forget his grievances. 2: From fear of Yudhishthira nobody dared to speak evil of Duryodhana or Dhrtarashtra. Bhima, however, reverenced the old king outwardly, but with a very unwilling heart. 3: After fifteen years Dhrtarashtra, afflicted by the cutting words of Bhīma, asked Yudhishthira's permission for himself and Gändhärī to retire to the woods clad in rage and barks in order to practise austerities; 10, 333, 346. 11: Yudhishthira and A. applauded Dhrtarashtra's intention to perform the crāddha of Bhīshma, etc., before setting out for the woods; Bhīma was unwilling; A. sought to pacify him, seconded by Yudhishthira. 12, (382), 387, 392: A. urged Bhīma to forget the injuries of Duryodhana. 13, 403: Vidura reported the speeches of Yudhishthira, A., and Bhīma to Dhṛtarāshtra. 15, 434: When Dhrtarashtra and Gandhari set out with his daughters-in-law on the day of full-moon in the month of Karttika, Yudhishthira and A. were filled with grief. 16, 455: Vidura and Sanjaya and Kuntī retired with Dhrtarāshtra and Gāndhārī into the woods; Dhṛtarāshtra caused Kṛpa and Yuyutsu to remain and made them over to Yudhishthira .-§ 788 (do.), XV, 22: Afflicted with grief, the Pandavas did not attend to their kingly offices; they set their heart upon seeing Dhrtaräshtra, etc., and proceeded towards the forest. 23, 618, 628: Headed by A. (on a chariot with white horses) and Krpa, they proceeded slowly (description of the expedition). 24, 646: Sahadeva and Kuntī informed Gandhari of the arrival of the Pandavas, and then advanced towards A., etc. ( $\beta$ ), dragging the childless old couple. 25. 658, 662: To the ascetics who had come from diverse regions to see the Pandavas, Sanjaya pointed out each of them (†γ). 26: Vidura entered the body of Yudhishthira, but was not cremated; 28, 747 (e).—§ 789 (Putradarçanap.), XV, 29: The Pandavas passed about a month in that forest: Vyasa came: Dhrtarashtra wished to see his dead children and kinsmen; the grief of Gandhari, etc. (3), was revived; she said that for sixteen years Dhrtarashtra never slept for grief; and also Krshna, etc. (e), grieved exceedingly; asked by Vyāsa to tell what she wished-30-Kuntī teld the story of Karna's birth; Vyasa promised to show her Karna. 31: They all proceeded towards the Bhagirathi, and waited for the advent of night; at sunset they bathed and finished their evening rites. 32: When night came, Vyasa plunged into the Bhagirathi for a bath and summoned all the deceased warriors, who all rose up from the water with a loud uproar. 33: When they had sported with one another for that night. Vyasa dismissed them within the twinkling of an eye.—§ 791 (do.), XV, 36, 1004 ( $\beta$ ): Dhrtarashtra became released from his grief; all returned home; the Pandavas had passed more than a month in the wood.—§ 792 (Nārudāgamanap.), XV, 37-39: Two years later the Pandavas were visited by Narada, who told them that Dhrtarashtra, etc., had been burnt by a forest conflagration; only Sanjaya had escaped. The Pandavas and the citizens all proceeded to Ganga in order to offer oblations of water to them, etc.—§ 793 (Mausalap.), XVI, 4, †107: After the mutual slaughter at Dvārakā, Kṛshṇa sent Dāruka to inform A. and tell him to come quickly; Krshna, entering Dvaravati, told his father to protect the ladies till A. came. Bala-Rāma and Krshna died. 5, 135, 138: A. with Dāruka proceeded to Dvārakā; when Kṛshṇa's 16,000 wives saw A., they uttered a loud cry. The city seemed to A. to be like the torrible river Vaitarani. A., Satya, and Rukmini fell down and wailed; then praising Krshna and comforting the ladies, A. wont to Vasudeva. 8k, 151, 153, 154, 157, 169: Vasudeva lamented and said he would die by abstaining from food. 7, 183, 224, 227, 230, 253: A. said that the hour had come also for the Pändavas to depart [from the world] ( $\lambda$ ); he would, however, first move the women, the children, and the aged of the Vrshnis to Indraprastha. Then he entered the hall of the Yadavas called Sudharma (sudharmam yadavim sabham), where he told the citizens and ministers that he would take away with him the remnants of the Vrshnis and Andhakas, as the sea would soon engulf the city, etc. A. passed that night in the mansion of Krshna. At dawn Vasudeva by yoga attained to the highest goal; his four wives ascended the funeral pyre. When A. had caused Vasudeva and his four wives to be burnt, he visited the place where the Vrshnis had been slaughtered, and caused the last rites to be performed and Rama and Krshna to be burnt. On the seventh day he set out with the ladies and children, the Yadava troops and other inhabitants, with Krshna's 16,000 wives, and Vajra; they numbered many millions in all; then the ocean flooded Dvärakä; they proceeded in slow marches; at Pancanada the Abhiras (Mlecchas) conspired to rob the cavalcade. A. only with great difficulty succeeded in stringing his bow. His celestial weapons would not come to his mind; the women were anatched away by the robbers; A.'s shafts soon became exhausted; formerly they had been inexhaustible. A. became very distressed; he escorted the remnant of the cavalcade to Kurukshetra; he established the son of Krtavarman in the city of Marttikavata with the remnant of the women of the Bhoja king; the remainder. with children and old men and women, at Indraprastha with Vajra for their ruler; the son of Yuyudhana (with old men, etc.) on the banks of the Sarasvati, etc.; then A. entered the retreat of Vyasa. 8, 254, 255, (261): A. informed Vyasa of what had passed (v) (" 500,000 warriors have thus been laid down"). Vyasa said that Krshna, as also the Pandavas, had finished their work; "the time has come for your departure from this world," etc. (f). A. entered Hästinapura and informed Yudhishthira of what had taken place.—§ 794 (Mahāprasthān.), XVII, 1, 2, 5, 20, 31, 37, 38: The Pandavas set their heart on leaving the world; the kingdom was made over to Yuyutsu, and Parikshit installed as king in Hastinapura, while Vajra ruled in Indraprastha. Krpa was installed as the preceptor of Parikshit. The subjects tried in vain to dissuade them; they and Draupadī divested themsolves of their ornaments and dressed in the barks of trees; then they threw their sacred fires into the water. Then they set out on their journey: the five Pandayas, Draupadi, and a dog; wandering towards the east they reached the sea of red water. Agni came (a) and caused A. to throw the Gandiva and his inexhaustible quiver into the water and thus restore them to Varuna. They now proceeded towards the south, etc., wishing to make a round of the whole earth. 2, 67: Having crossed Himavat, etc., Krshnā dropped down, in consequence of her partiality for A.; then Sahadeva, then Nakula, then A. fell down; A., because he had said that he would consume all the foes in a single day, but had not accomplished it. 3, 92: Yudhishthira's second test. - § 795 (Svargarohanap.), XVIII, 1-3: Yudhishthira's third test: 2, 36, 66. 4, [128: When arrived in heaven Yudhishthira saw there Govinda (Krshna) in his Brahmaform (description), adored by Phalguna (Arjuna)].--Cf. the following synonyms:---

Arjuna<sup>3</sup>, a rshi in the palace of Yama. § 267 (Yamasubhāv.): II, 8, 328.

Arjunabhigamanaparvan. § 317: Hearing that the Pandavas had been banished, the Bhojas, Vrshnis, Andhakas, the heirs of Pancala, the Cedi king Dhrshjaketu, the brothers Kaikeya went to see them. As Krshna (b) said: "the earth shall drink the blood of Duryodhana, etc.," Arjuna tried to pacify him by reciting the feats achieved in his former lives (b); then Arjuna, the soul of Krshna, became silent, and Jandadana (i.e. Krshna) (b) replied that he was identical with Arjuna. Then Pancali (i.e. Krshna), surrounded by Dhrshjadyumna and her other brothers, praised Krshna (b). She then blamed him and the Pandavas for having let her endure the shame of being dragged in the assembly, etc.

("fie on that Gandiva (c)"), and relates the persocutions of Duryodhana (cf. § 197) and the valour of Bhima until the svayamvara. Krshna promised that she should be avenged, and Dhrehtadyumna said: "I will slay Drona; Çikhandin Pitamaha (i.e. Bhishma); Bhimesona Duryodhana; and Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) Karna; assisted by Rama and Krehna we are invincible in battle even to Indra" (III, 12). -§ 318: Krshna said that if he had not been absent from Dvaraka (v. 610: the Anartta country) at that time, he should have come and prevented the gambling by either persuading Dhrtarashtra (relating how the son of Virasona was formerly deprived of his kingdom, etc.), or compelling him by force; on arriving at Douraka he had learnt from Yuyudhana what had happened and had instantly come to see them (III, 13). - §§ 319-321: Saubhavadhop. Arjunavanavasaparvan ("the section relating to Arjuna's dwelling in the wood," the 16th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 247: The Pandavas continued to reside there, and by their prowess they brought many kings under their sway, and on account of their virtue the whole race of the Kurus grow in prosperity. After some time robbers lifted the cattle of a brahman, who then repaired to Khandavaprasths and reproved the Pandavas. Arjuna heard it; but the chamber where the Pandavas had their weapons being then occupied by Yudhishthira with Krshnā, Arjuna was obliged to violate the established rule by entering the chamber. Then, armed with the bow and attired in mail and riding on his war-chariot decked with flagstaffs, he pursued the thieves and compelled them to give up the booty. Then, notwithstanding Yudhishthira's objections, he went to the forest to live there for twelve years (I, 213).—§ 248: Arjuna set out followed by brahmans conversant with the vedas and vedangas and devoted to the contemplation of the Supreme Spirit (adhyālmacintakāḥ), by mendicants (bhaikshāḥ) devoted to Bhagavat (Bhagavadbhaktūḥ), by reciters of the Purāņas (sūtāḥ Paurāņikāḥ), and by reciters of sacred stories (divyākhyānāni), etc., and settled at Gangadrara, where the brahmans performed innumerable agnihotras. One day when Arjuna had performed his ablutions in the Ganga, and offered the oblations of water to his deceased ancestors, and when he was about to rise up from the stream desirous of performing his sacrificial rites before the fire, he was drawn away to the bottom of the water by Ulūpī, the daughter of the Naga king Kauravya of the lineage of Airavata, urged by the god of desire. There he saw a sacrificial fire, where he performed his sacrificial rites, by which Agni was much gratified. Ulupi persuaded him that it was a greater merit to give himself up to her than to keep the vow of a brahmacarin, and having spent the night there, he in the morning, accompanied by Ulapi, came back to Gangadvara. Ulapi, taking leave of him there, said that he would be invincible in water (I, 214).—§ 249: Then he set out towards the Himavat and came to Agastyavata and the mountain of Vasishtha; in Bhrgutunga he bestowed many thousands of kine, etc., on brahmans and visited many tirthas (especially all those in Anga, Vanga, and At the gate of the kingdom of Kalinga the brahmans desisted from following him further: he crossed Kalinga, beheld the Mahendra mountain adorned with the ascetics, and went to Manipura, proceeding slowly along the seashore. There he married Citrangada, the daughter of king Citrarahana (b), and dwelt there for three years. When Citrangada had given birth to a son, Arjuna set out on his wanderings again (I, 215).- § 250: Then Arjuna went to the tirthas at the southern ocean. There five tirthas were shunned on account of five crocodiles that seized the devotees: Ayastyatirtha, Saubhadra, Pauloma, Karandhama (giving the results of a horse-sacrifice), and Bharadvaja's tirtha. Arjuna plunged into the Saubhadra (so called after a maharshi), and was seized by a crocodile, which he dragged to the shore. It then became the apsaras Vargā, the friend of Dhanapati (Kubera). When she with her four companions (Saurabheyi, Samīcī, Vudvudā, and Latā), going to the abode of Kubera, had in vain tempted an ascetic brahman, that brahman had cursed thom, saying that they should become crocodiles for 100 years (I, 216). Vargā said: "As we asked the rehi to grant us pardon, he said: '100 and 100,000 are all indicative of cternity; but the words 100 as employed by me is to be understood as a limited period; you will be delivered by an exalted individual, and those waters shall become sacred and purifying under the name of Naritirthani.' The devarshi Narada directed us to these lakes, and said that Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) would soon deliver us." Arjuna then also delivered the other four apsarases. Then he proceeded to Manipura to see Citrangada; with her he had begotten king Babhruvahana. Then he proceeded towards Gokarna (I, 217).- § 251: Then Arjuna visited the tirthas on the shores of the western ocean, and arrived at Prabhasa. There Madhueudana (- Krshpa) visited him, and he and Arjuna, who were the rshis Nara and Narayana, sported there for some time. Then they went to the Raivataka mountain, after Krehna had caused this mountain to be well adorned by many artifices; there he saw the performances of the actors and the dancers. The next morning they set out for Drārakā, welcomed by the Bhojas, Vṛshṇis, and Andhakas. There he dwelt in the mansion of Krshna for many days (I, 218).

A drought occurred extending for twelve years; the R., having made an asylum for thomselves, continued to live there in a forest of Himavat. Seeing Arundhati devoted to penances, Civa in the form of a brahman came to her and asked for alms, and, as her store of food was exhausted, he told her to cook jujubes. While she listened to his discourses and cooked, without food, that twelve years' drought passed away to her as if it were a single day. Then the seven R. returned: Mahadeva, in his own form, said that the ascetic merit of Arundhati was much greater than theirs, and granted her the boon that this spot should become an excellent tirthe named Badarapācana, resorted to by Si. and D.-r., and that he who observes a fast there and resides there for three nights after having cleansed himself should obtain the benefit of a twelve years' fast. Then he repaired to heaven. R. wondered at the sight of the god and because Arundhatt was unfatigued and still possessed the hue of health: 2795, 2798, 2805, 2810, 2814. 2815, 2818. — § 707 (Mokshadh.): XII, 318, 11711 (one who, having previously seen [the star] A., fails to see it . . has but one year left to live).—§ 750 (Bisastainyop.): XIII, 93, 4416, (4445), 4455, 4460, (4497), (4528).—§ 751 (Capathavidhi): XIII, 94a, \(\beta\), 4551, (4584). — § 764 (Anuçāsan.): XIII, 123, 5877 (Arundhatīva . . . [Ashţāvakra-Dik-samvāda(h)] ("discourse between Ashtavakra and the goddess of the North"). § 731b (Anuçasanik.): XIII, 19 ff.: Bhishma said: In days of yore Ashtāvakra (of severe penances) asked R. Vadānya for his beautiful daughter Suprabhā. Vadānya first caused him to make a journey to the North, indicating the road: (1) Himavat (peopled by Si. and Ca.); (2) the sacred river Bahuda, where he bathed in one of the tirthas, etc. (description), and worshipped Rudra and Uma; (3) Kailasa, where he saw a golden gate, etc. (a), and was honoured by Kubera among Y. (with Manibhadra), G., and K., and where Aps. ( $\beta$ ) danced; there he remained a celestial year; (4) having crossed Kailāsa and Mandara as also the golden mountains, he came to the region where Mahadeva resides attired as an ascetic, Parshadas of which are frolicsome and fond of dance and possessed of faces of diverse forms, which was peopled by Si., Ca., and Pc., where Uma had practised austerities for the sake of [obtaining] Civa; where, in days of yore, on the Mahaparçva [mountain] (to the north of the god) the Seasons, etc. (a'), in their material forms had adored Mahadeva; (5) a beautiful forest (description), where the river Mondakini was seen, with an old and decrepit female ascetic (with many beautiful maidens), who in vain tempted him with love (XIII, 19), at last appearing in a beautiful form (XIII, 20). She turned out to be the goddess of the North (Uttaram dicam), who, having been gratified by R. Vadanya, had devised this trial and now instructed him, showing him the levity of women, even when aged; "thou hast subjugated all the worlds by thy strength of mind; thy journey back will not be irksome; thou wilt obtain the wife thou hast chosen; she will bear thee a son." Ashfavakra came back to his own abode, and then to Vadānya, who wedded him to the girl. There he continued to dwell joyously in his own hermitage (XIII, 21).

The embryo in her womb had become versed in the Castras and the Vedas with the augas, and blamed Kahoda, who had been reading the whole night. The great rehi Kahoda cursed him to become crooked on eight parts of his body, wherefore he, when born, was called Ashtavakra. In order to procure wealth for Sujata, Kahoda went to king Janaka (son of Indradyumna, v. 133. 10624), where he was defeated in a controversy with the sūta (v. 10613, etc., sūtaputram v. 10671) Bandin and was immersed into water. Uddālaka prevailed upon Sujātā to keep it a secret from Ashjāvakra, who regarded Uddālaka as his father and Cvetaketu, the son of Uddalaka, who was of the same age with himself, as his brother, until in his 12th year Cvetaketu in anger happened to disclose the matter to him. He and Cvetaketu then went to the sacrifice of Janaka, and on being driven from the entrance Achtavakra met the king (III, 132), and in the course of a conversation with him and the doorkeeper he compared Janaka to Yayati. and said that he had heard that Bandin caused those whom he had vanquished in disputation to be drowned in the sea by men sent by Janaka, and he declared that he had come to maintain the unity with Brahman (Brahmadvaitam) and to defeat Bandin, then he answered several enigmatical questions (about the wheel of Time, the thunder and lightning, the fish, egg, stone, and river) and was admitted (III, 133). Here they disputed in such a way that Bandin enumerated things of which there is only 1 (fire, Sun, Indra, and Yama), Ashtavakra groups of 2 (Indra and Agni, 2 devarshis: Narada and Parvata, 2 Acrins, 2 wheels of a chariot; husband and wife), Bao of 3 (3 times the creatures are born, etc.; see Nil.), Ao of 4 (4 are the acramas of the brahmans; 4 orders perform this sacrifice (!), etc.), Bao of 5 (5 fires, etc.), A° of 6 (6 cows, it is asserted by some, are the dakshina for establishing the sacred fire, "adhane," etc.), Bao of 7 (7 domesticated animals, 7 wild animals, etc.), Ao of 8 (8 canas make a catamana, see BR., 8 are the legs of the carabha, etc.), Bao of 9 (9 are the samidhent verses for the Pitre, etc.),  $A^{\circ}$  of 10 (10 are the cardinal points, etc.),  $Ba^{\circ}$  of 11 (11 are the ekādaçinas of the creatures, see NII., 11 are there the yapas, etc.), Ao of 12 (12 months, etc.). As Bandin had said the first half-cloka with 13 (the 13th tithi is deemed most auspicious, 13 are the islands of the earth), he stopped, and Ashtavakra fulfilled the cloka. Bandin was then decomed to be vanquished, and at the request of Ashfavakra he merged into the sea, after he had declared himself to be the son of Varuna and that he had caused the brahmans to be drowned in order that they might see the twelve years sattra of Varuna that was performed simultaneously with that of Janaka. They at once reappeared, and Kahoda let Ashfuvakra bathe in the river Samanga, and all his limbs were immediately made straight, and the Samanga became a remover of sin. "Therefore you also should bathe there" (III, 134).

(B.; C. has yoshitam), 2922 (A.): In Additutirtha R. A.D. lived in days of yore, observant of the duties of a householder (description); he always practised the vow of brahmacarya. Once the ascetic mendicant (bhikshukah) Jaigisharya, devoted to yoga, came to Devala's hermitage and attained to success (siddhim). Devala always kept his eyes on him. After a long time, Devala on one occasion lost sight of Jaigisharya; at the hour of dinner, however, he approached Devala in order to solicit alms, and D. worshipped him, after the rites laid down by R., for many years; but Jaigishavya never spoke a single word to him. D. proceeded to the shore of the ocean, journeying through the welkin and bearing his earthen jug with him; there he saw Jaigtshavya, who had arrived there before him, at which M.-r. A. wondered much. Having finished his ablutions and silent prayers, D. returned to his hermitage, bearing with him his earthen vessel filled with water. Entering his own hermitage, he saw Jaigtshavya seated there. D. then soared aloft into the sky in order to ascertain who Jaigishavya really was. He saw crowds of sky-ranging Si. rapt in meditation, and he saw Jaigisharya, reverentially worshipped by them, and he became filled with wonder at the sight. He saw Jaigishavya set out for the Pitrloka > Yamyaloka, etc. ( $\mu$ ). At last he was seen to pass into the regions of the brahmasattvins, then through three other regions to those of chaste women and such as are devoted to their husbands. At this point A. lost sight of him, and enquiring of the foremost of Si. in the regions of the brahmaeattvine, he was told that Jaiglehavya had gone to the eternal region (loka) of Brahman. A. endeavoured to soar aloft; but he soon fell down, and the Si. declared that he was not worthy to proceed thither. D. came down, descending from one region to another in due order, to his hermitage, where he again beheld Jaigtshavya, who taught him the religion of Emancipation (mokaha) and the ordinances of yoga, etc., and performed all the acts according to the rites for that end. Then all creatures with P. began to weep, saying, "Who will henceforth give us food?" D. then thought of renouncing the religion of moksha; then all kinds of fruits and roots, etc., began to weep, saying, "The wickedhearted D. will once more pluck and eat us, having once assured all creatures of his perfect harmlessness." Then D. abandoned the religion of a householder and adopted that of moksha, and obtained the highest success (siddhi) and the highest yoga. Aurvopākhyāna(m) ("the episode relating to Aurva"). § 227 (Paraçara): King Krtavirya, the yajya of the Bhrgus, at the end of the Some sacrifice gratified the brahmans with large offerings. After he had ascended to heaven, it came to happen that his descendants were in want of wealth. Knowing that the Bhrgus were rich, they went to them and begged. Some amongst the Bhrgus buried their wealth under the earth, some gave it away to brahmans, and some duly gave it to the kshattriyas. Some kshattriyas, while digging at the house of a Bhargava, came upon a large treasure. The kehattriyas then began to kill the Blirgus with their arrows all over the earth, even the embryos. A Bhrgu woman fled to Himarat, holding an embryo in one of her thighs ("for 100 years," v. 6822). From fear a brahman woman reported this to the kehattriyas. The kshattriyas then went to destroy that embryo, which, however, came out, tearing open the thigh and dazzling the eyes of the kshattriyas so that they lost their sight. They asked the woman that they might be restored to sight, promising to abstain from their sinful practice (I, 178). She told them to ask the child, which they did, and regaining their eyesights they went away. The child (viprarshi) was named Aurva, because he had been born after tearing open his mother's thigh (uru). Aurva devoted himself to the austerest of penances with the object of destroying the whole world to gratify his ancestors. The Pitrs then all came from Pitrloka, and said: "Be propitious towards the three worlds. Having grown weary with the long periods of life allotted to us, we desired our own destruction through the kshattriyas. Such as commit suicide never attain to regions that are blessed, therefore we abstained from self-destruction" (I, 179). When Aurea replied that his vow must not be in vain, the Pitrs prevailed upon him to throw his wrath into the waters of the ocean, the whole universe being made of water. It became a large horse-head, which, emitting fire from its mouth, consumes the waters of the ocean (I, 180).-§ 228: Hearing this the viprarshi Paraçara controlled his wrath from destroying the worlds. But he performed a great rakshasa sacrifice and began to burn the rakshasas in it, and Vasishtha did not restrain him. Desirous of ending that sacrifice the rshi Atri came to that place, and also Pulastya and Pulaha and Kratu, desiring to save the rakshasas. Seeing that many rakshasas had already been slain, Pulastya said: "That which befell thy father was brought about by his own curse! No rakshasa was capable of devouring Cakti; he himself provided for his own death! Vigramiles was only a blind instrument in that matter. Both Cakti and Kalmashapada have ascended to heaven, and are enjoying great happiness, as also the other sons of Vasishtha. Abandon this sacrifice of thine." Paracara then brought his sacrifice to an end, and threw the fire into the woods on the north of the Himavai, where it may be seen to this day consuming rakehaeas and trees and stones in all seasons (parvani parvani) (I, 181).

Indra then came in the guise of B. r. Vasishtha, and told her that everything is attainable by penances, and asked her to boil five jujubes, when he went away to mentally recite certain mantras at Indratirths, that was not far away. She sat down to boil the jujubes, but in vain; the day was about to wane; her fuel was all consumed; then she first thrust her feet into the fire, without changing a muscle of her face. Indra then showed himself in his own proper form, and said that her wish would be accomplished; throwing off her body, she would live with him in heaven as his spouse; and this tirtha would be the foremost in the world and be called B.; he granted her a boon superior to that granted to Arundhati (s) by Mahadeva: the person who will reside in this tirtha for only one night and bathe there with his soul fixed on meditation, will, after having thrown off his body, obtain many regions of blessedness difficult of acquisition. Then Indra went back to heaven; a shower of celestial flowers poured down, etc., and Crutarati, throwing off her body, became the spouse of Indra.—Cf. Badaripācana.

Dalbhya Baka gave them his, and then applied to Dhytardshira, who, as some of his kine had died, angrily told him to take these. B. set his heart upon the destruction of king Dhrtarashtra. Cutting the flesh off from the dead animals, having ignited a fire on the tirtha of the Sarasvati, he poured those pieces as libations for the destruction of king Dhrtarashtra's kingdom, which began to waste away, until he, reminded by his counsellors, repairing to the bank of the Sarasrati, had gratified R. B., who, in order to free his kingdom, again poured libations into the fire. Receiving many animals as a gift, he once more proceeded to the Naimisha wood, and Dhrtarushtra returned to his capital.

Markandeya related: After the conflict between the gods and asuras was over, and Indra had become the ruler of the three worlds, all people were happy and virtuous. Once Indra, riding on Airavata, surveyed his happy subjects, and, descending to earth, he made a visit to the rehi Baka, who had lived for 100,000 years and was adored by gods and rshis (? devarshiganasevita, v. 13236; PCR. has the accus.), in his hermitage in the east by the seaside. Indra asked him about the sorrows of those who have a long life. Baka mentioned several common disagreeable things, and finally, the having to witness the injustices that take place. Indra then asked him about their joys; he mentioned the frugal life of a pious brahman, who only eats after having waited on his guest.

Bakavadha ("the slaughter of Baka"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 313 (Bakavadhah parva, i e. Bakavadhaparvan).

Bakavadhaparvan ("the slaughter of Baka," the 10th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 215: I, 167 ff.: The Pandaras for some time dwelt in the abode of the brahman, living on alms; Bhīma alone used to eat one-half of the alms. One day Bhima and Kunti overheard the brahman complaining (I. 157), and his wife (I. 158) and daughter asked to be sacrificed for him to a rakehasa, and their little son said that he would slay the rakehasa with a blade of grass. Kunti approached (I, 159), and learned that the rakshasa Baka ("king of the Asuras," v. 6808), a cannibal, protected the town and the country, receiving as his fee a cartload of rice, two buffaloes, and the human being who brought them to him, from one after another of the householders, while the king, residing in Vetrakiyagrha (see BR.), did nothing to protect the country against him. Now the turn had come for the brahman, and as he had no wealth to buy a man, and could not part with any of his family, he would go with all his family to the rakshasa, in order that he might devour them all (I, 160). Kunti said that one of her sons would bring the food to the rakshasa. This the brahman energetically refused, until she had told him that on account of his strength and mantras her son would be safe; but he ought not to disclose this fact to anybody, for then people might trouble them out of curiosity, and if her son imparted his knowledge to anybody he would himself no longer be able to profit by it. Bhima also consented (I, 161). When the others returned home with their alms, Yudhishthira blamed his mother for her rash act; but she relied on Bhima (I, 162). The next morning Bhima set out for the abode of the rakshasa, and approaching he began himself to eat the food he carried, loudly calling the rakshasa by his name. The rakshasa came out in a fury; but Bhima, disregarding his yells and blows, leisurely ate up the whole of that food and washed his hands. Then they began to hurl trees at each other, and thereupon they clasped each other with their arms. At last Bhims pressed Baks down to the earth, and placing one knee on the middle of his back, bent him double, while he (Baka) rosred frightfully and began to vomit blood (I, 163). Baks died uttering frightful yells. The rukshasas, his relatives, came and promised never again to kill human beings, and from that day the rakehasas of that region were very peaceful towards mankind. Bhims placed the corpse at one of the gates of the town, and went away unobserved. The brahman told the citizens that it was a brahman skilled in mantras (mantrasiddha) who had slain the rakshass, and they established a Brahma festival (brahmamaham) (I, 164).

[Baladevatīrthayātrā] ("Baladeva's visit to the sacred places on the Sarasvati"; cf. Sarasvatam parva). § 615 (Gada-y.-p.): Vaiçampayana said: Baladera first proceeded to Prabhasa, where Uduraj (i.e. Soma), who had been affected with phthisis (yakshman), became freed from his curse, whence its name. Asked by Janamejaya, Vaicampayana related Prabhasotpattikathana (q.v.). Thence Bala-Rama proceeded to Camasodbheda, where he passed one night and gave away costly gifts. Thence he proceeded to Udapana (b) (IX, 35-36), and thence to Vinagana (IX, 36), called so by the R. because the Sarasvati has there become invisible from contempt of Cudras and Abhiras. Thence to Subhūmika (c), Gandharvānām tīrtha (d), Gargasrotas (e); thence ("smeared in white sandal-paste and attired in blue robes") to Cankhatirtha (f); thence to the Draita lake; then, along the southern bank of the Sarasrati, to Nagadhunran (g). Baladeva then set out with his face towards the East, and one after another reached hundreds and thousands of tirthas that occurred at every step. Bathing in all those tirthas. and observing fasts, etc., as directed by R., and giving away wealth in profusion, etc., he (always smeared with white sandal-paste) set out for that spot where the Sarasrati turns in an eastward direction in order to behold the R. in the forest of Naimisha (h), and he became filled with wonder. "There, at Kurukshetra, O foremost one of Kuru's race, do thou perform great sacrifices and rites." Thence Bala-Rama went to the tirtha Saptasarasvata (description), resorted to by

Vaneyas and other ascetics, where the great ascetic crowned with success (siddhah) performed his penances (IX, 37). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaicampayana related the history of Saptaeuraevata (i) and Mankanaka (j) (IX, 38). Having passed one night there, Bala-Rūma went to Auçanasa tirtha ("the 11rtha of Uçanas") Kapalamocana; the great muni Mahodara, whose thigh had been seized by the head of a Ra. slain by Rama [Daçarathi], was liberated. There Kavya (i.e. Cukra, Ucanas) had performed tapas, and the whole science of politics and morals (niti) was revealed to him, while meditating on the war of Dai. and Da. Requested by Janamejaya, Vaicampayana related the story of Mahodara (k). Thence Bala-Rama went to the abode of Rushangu (1), where Ārshtishena had formerly undergone austere penances, and where the great muni Viccamitra had become a brahman. Then to that tirtha where Brahman (Lokapitamahah) had created the worlds; where the great R. Arshtishena had acquired brahmanhood; where the R.-r. Sindhudrips, the great ascetic Devapi (both in the Krta age, IX, 40, 2294), and the muni Viçuamitra had obtained brahmanhood (IX, 39). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the history of Archichena (m) and of Viccimitra (n). Thence to the abode of Baka, where Dalbhya Baka had practised austerities (IX, 40); which resounded with the chanting of the Vedas (brahmaghoshair avakirnam; B. has Brahmayoner Avakirnam "from Br. to Av.," Nil.), where the R. Baka Dalbhya (o) poured the kingdom of Dhrtarashtra Vaicitraviryi (? Vaicitraviryinah. genitive) as a libation into the sacrificial fire. In that tirtha Brhaspati also poured libations into the sacrificial fire, by means of flesh, in order to destroy the Asuras, and the As, began to waste away and were destroyed by the gods. Thence to Yayata tirtha, where, at a sacrifice of king Yayati Nahusha, the Sarasrati produced milk and clarified butter, whereafter Yayati went to heaven. Once again Yayati performed a sacrifice there, and Sarasvati gave to each of the brahmans everything for which he cherished a wish; they regarded the gifts as made to them by the king, and praised and blessed him; D. and G. were pleased. Thence Baladera proceeded to the tirtha Vasishthaparaha (IX, 41). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana told the history of Vasishthapavaha (p), and why it is so rapid, and the brahmanicide of Indra (e), who was purified by bathing in that tirtha. Thence Baladeva went to the tirtha of Soma, where in days of yore Soma had performed the Rajasuya sacrifice, with Atri for his hotr, after which the great battle took place between D. and Da., Dai., and a Ra., named Taraka, in which Skanda (Mahasena) slow Taraka and obtained the command of the celestial forces; in that tirtha is a gigantic Acrattha tree, under whose shade Karttikeya (Skanda) always resides in person (IX, 43). Requested by Janamejaya, Vuicampayana related the investiture of Skanda (u). The tirtha, where in days of yore Varuna, the lord of the waters, had been installed by the celestials, is named Tuijasa. Having bathed in that tirths and adored Skanda, Bala-Rama gave gold, etc., to the brahmans; passing one night there, he became cheerful and happy (IX, 44-48). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampayana related the installation of Faruna (v) in a former kalpa. Thence Baladeva ("the slayer of Pralamba") proceeded to Agnitirtha, where Agni, disappearing, became concealed in the Cami wood, wherefore the gods repaired to Brahmán, and asked him to create fire. Requested by Janamejaya, Vaicempayans related the story of Agnitirths (w). Thence 107

he went to Brahmayoni, where Brahman had exercised his functions of creation; in days of yore Brahmon, having bathed in that tirtha with all the gods, created all the tirthas for the gods, according to due rites. Thence to Kaubera tirtha, where Ailavila (i.e. Kubera) (x), having practised austerities, obtained the mastery of all treasures (Dhanadhipalyam), and all kinds of wealth, etc., came to him of their own accord. Rama there beheld the excellent woods of Kubera. Thence Bala-Rama went to Badarapacana, where the fruits of every season are always to be found (IX, 47), and where many ascetics and Si. are dwelling. (The story of Badarapacana (y) and of Arundhati (s).) Requested by Janamejaya, Vaicampayana related the birth of Crutavati (aa). Then Baladeva proceeded to Indratirtha (IX, 48). (The history of Indratirtha (bb).) Thence to Rāmatīrtha (co), the resort of D. and B.-r. Thence to Yamunutirtha (dd). Thence Baladeva, adorned with garlands of wild flowers (ranamali), proceeded to Adityatirtha (es), where also R. Asita Devala obtained great yoga powers (IX, 49). (The history of Asita Devala (ff).) Thence Bala-Rama went to the tirtha of Soma (IX, 50), where Soma had in former days performed the Rajasaya sacrifice, and where the great battle was fought about Tara (Tarakamayah). Thence Bala-Rama proceeded to the tirtha of the muni Sarascata, where, during a drought of twelve years, Sarasvata in former days taught the Vedas to many brahwans. Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the history of Saraevata (gg) and of Dadhica (hh). Thence Bala-Rama proceeded to the tirtha of the old maiden (vrddhakanyā) (IX, 51). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampayana related the story of the vrddhakanya (ii). While there, Baladeva heard of the slaughter of Calya. Having come out of the environs of Samantapancaka (Samantapancakadvārāt), he enquired of the R. what was the result of a visit to Kurukshetra, which they told him (IX, 52). (Kurukshetrakathana (kk) (IX, 53).) Having visited Kurukshetra, Bala-Rama proceeded to a large and exceedingly beautiful hermitage, overgrown with madhukas, etc., and was told by R.: Here Vishau in days of yore undertook austere penances and performed duly all the eternal sacrifices. Here a brahmant girl, having from youth observed the vow of brahmacarya, was crowned with success (siddha), and, in possession of yoga powers, she proceeded to heaven. The beautiful daughter of Candilya, a brahmacarini, who had performed penances difficult to women, went to heaven [here], and was worshipped by the gods and brahmans. Baladeva then began his ascent of Himavat, and soon came to the tirtha Plakshaprasravana, and thence to the tirtha Karapacana (PCR. ovapao), where he passed one night. > the asylum of Mitra and Varuna. From Karapavana > that spot on the Yamuna where in days of yore Indra, Agni, and Aryaman had obtained great happiness. Then he sat down with R. and Si. in order to listen to their talk. There came R. Narada (U), and, asked by Bala-Rama, he told him all that had happened to the Kurus, including the names of these chiefs that had fallen (»), and of those that were still alive (5), and asked him to go to the field to witness the mace-encounter between Bhims and Duryodhans, which was to take place that very day. Bala-Rama then bade farewell, and dismissed all those that had accompanied him to Dvaraka, and descended from Himavat and Plakshaprasravana, and sang a verse in praise of the Saraevatt. Then he ascended a chariot with goodly steeds, and arrived on the field (IX, 54).

VIII, 69, 3438, 3440, 3441, 3447: The hunter Balāks used to slay animals for the livelihood of his sons and wives, and thus he also supported his parents and others that depended upon him always speaking the truth and never harbouring malice devoted to the duties of his own order. One day, having found no other animal, he slew a blind (ghrānacakshusham) beast of prey while it was drinking water. A shower of flowers fell from the skies; a celestial chariot took him to heaven, while Aps., etc., were singing. That beast of prey had by austerities obtained a boon, and had become the cause of the destruction of all creatures. For this reason he was made blind by Brahman.

Bali  $\sim$  Sudeshņā  $\sim$  Dīrgbatamas  $\sim$  çūdrā Anga. Vanga. Kalinga. Puppra. [Bali-Vasava-samvada(h)] ("the discourse between Bali and Indra"). (a) § 671b (Mokshadh.): One day, after having subjugated all As., Indra asked Brahmán where Bali now was, he who was Vayu, etc. (a). Brahman said that Bali might now have taken his birth among camels or bulls, etc., and be staying in a descried house; he told Indra not to slay him, but to ask him for instruction in morality. Indra roamed over the earth on Airacata, and found Bali in a deserted house in the form of an ass. Indra scoffed at him, and asked if he did not grieve, and where his 42,000 Gandharvas had gone who in former days used to dance before him, and also about the garland given to him by Brahman. Bali said: "When thou becomest like me, thou wilt not indulge in speech like this" (XII, 223). Bali said that D., men, P., G., snakes, and Ra. were under his sway in days gone by, and that all creatures used to flatter him; but he did not grieve at all; in reality it is Time that creates and destroys all things, though living creatures brag of doing this or that; "this royal glory (rajya-cri) . . . does not dwell long in one place; she had dwelt in thousands of Indras before thee, who were very much superior to thee; . . . knowing thee to be full of vanity, she will very soon desert thee" (XII, 224). Indra saw Cri, adorned with head-plumes, etc., issue out of Bali, who did not know whether she was an As. damsel or a celestial one or a human one; Indra asked her who she was, as she stood there like Maya herself; she said: "Virocana did not know me; Bali does not know me; the learned called me Duheahā ('difficult to be borne'), etc. (\$); thou knowest me not, O Indra, nor does any one of the deities know me; nor the Creator (Dhata), nor the Ordainer (Vidhata) rules over me; it is Time that moves me from one place to another; do not disregard Bali. Bali has fallen off from truth, etc.; formerly he was devoted to the brahmans, etc.; but latterly he began to cherish feelings of animosity towards the brahmans and touched clarified butter with soiled hands; therefore I desert him and shall henceforth dwell in thee; there is none among D., G., As., or Ra. that can keep me for ever." Requested by Indra, she told him how she might be able to reside in him permanently, dividing herself into four parts, according to the ordinance laid down in the Vedae: one to be established on earth, one in the waters, one in Fire, one among the good, while Indra should continue to protect her. Bali said that when the Sun would shine only upon the region of Brahman in the middle of Sumeru, then a great battle between the gods and the Asuras would again occur, and in that fight Bali would certainly vanquish them all. Indra said that Brahman had commanded him never to kill him; "never will come the day when the Sun will shine only from the meridian (madhyatah ethitah); Brahman has before this laid down the laws that regulate the Sun's motions . . . . . Bali proceeded towards the South; India proceeded towards the North and ascended the skies (XII, 225).—(b) § 678b (Mokshadh.): Bhishma said: After the battle between the gods and the Asuras, in which a large number of Dai, and Da. fell, Bali became king. He was deceived by Vishau, who once more established his sway over all the worlds. Indra was once more invested with the sovereignty of the gods, etc.; the three worlds once more swelled with prosperity, and Brahman became glad of heart. At that time Indra, accompanied by R., V., A., A., D.-r., G., Si., etc., seated on the four-tusked Airdvata, made a progress through all the worlds. Once he saw Bali Vairocani within a certain mountain cave on the sea-shore. Bali showed no signs of sorrow or agitation. Indica asked him how it was that he was so unmoved; "thou art bound with Varuna's noose and hast been struck with my thunderbolt." Bali said: "What I am now, thou wilt be in the future," explaining that only time (not merit) rules the destiny of men; "that thou regardest thyself as the actor is the root of all sorrow": "in the course of time many thousands of Indras and of deities have been swept away yuga after yuga, and will be swept away in future . . . , just as Prthu, etc. (a)," though they were devoted to the Vedas and Vedis rites, etc., and though all of them were the offspring of Daksha's daughters; "those 1,000 [celestial years], that are the measure of thy sway, will surely come to an end"; "A., R., Sa., V., and M. were all vanquished by me," etc. Indra's panegyric on Bali. Indra left the spot and was praised by the M.-r.; Fire once more began to bear the libations [to the gods], etc. (XII, 227)

[Bhagavadgītāparvan(°va)] ("the section including the song of the Exalted one," the 69th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Bhagavadgītā). § 576: Sanjaya informs Dhṛtarāshṭra of Bhīshma's full in buttle (VI, 13). Dhṛtarāshtra's lament and inquiries (VI, 14). Sanjaya, preising Vyasa for his yoga power, i.e. the celestial vision (description) he had given him, began his discourse on the battle. Duryodhana gave Duhçasana instructions about the protection of Bhishma from Cikhandin (VI, 15). The two hosts arrayed at sunrisc (description). Cakuni, etc. (a), stood each at the head of an akshauhini; the 11th under Bhishma (description) stood in advance of the whole army. The Sphjayas, headed by Dhrshtadyumna, looked [beholding Bhīshma] like small animals beholding a lion (VI, 16). On that day Soma approached the region of the Pitrs. Omens. Every morning Bhishma and Drona prayed for victory for the Pandaras, though they must fight for Dhytarashtra according to their pledge: Bhishma briefly addressed the Kuru army, mentioning Nabhaga, etc. (3), as examples. Karna, with his friends and relatives, laid aside his weapons owing to Bhishma. Description of the proceedings of the army, especially of Bhīshma, etc. ( $\gamma$ ) (VI, 17). Duḥçāsana, etc. ( $\delta$ ), protected Bhishma from behind, etc. (VI, 18). Yudhishthira told Arjuna, according to the words of the M.-r. Brhaspati, to array the troops in needle-mouthed (queimukha) array. Arjuna said that he would make a Vajra array, which was designed by Indra; they would all seek sholter with Bhima. The leaders were Bhimasena, etc. (c). Omens (VI, 19). When the sun rose the Kauravas stood facing the west, the Pandaras facing the east. Disposition of the two armies: Duryodhana, etc. (ζ) (VI, 20). Yudhishthira sorrowfully addressed Arjuna, who consoled him with his truth, righteousness, etc., which Narada, Bhishma, and Drona know, and which were a powerful aid towards victory according to Brahman's words to Indra, etc., on the occasion of the battle between the gods and the Asuras; "victory clings to Krshna"; it was by choosing him that the gods under Indra had vanquished the Asuras (VI, 21). Disposition of the troops in the Pandava army: Çikhandin, etc. (η) (VI, 22). At Kṛshṇa's instance Arjuna recited a hymn to Durga. Durga appeared and gave him assurances of victory. Merits of this hymn (VI, 23). The combatants of both armies were cheerful, etc. (VI, 24). Before Dropa, Duryodhana compared the combatants of the Pandava army: Bhims, etc. (0), with his own; Drops, etc. (1). Krshna, etc., blew Pancajanya, etc. (x). Arjuna asked Krshas to place his chariot between the two armies, so that he might see who were assembled to fight. Beholding his relatives, etc., Arjuna was filled with compassion and overcome with despondency, and refused to fight (VI, 25). Krohna appealed to Arjuna to shake off his despondency, but in vain. Krehna then declared to Arjuna the nature and the attributes of the soul, and the folly of grieving for the dead, and exhorted him to comply with the duties of his order by fighting fairly, and to apply himself to work for work's sake, and not for the sake of its results. Krehna spoke of contemplation (VI, 26); on the Sankhyas and Yogins; on devotion to work (VI, 27); on his reiterated births; on the best way (VI, 28); on abandonment of actions and application to actions; he has the right view who considers Sankhya and Yoga as one (VI, 29); on the means of rising to devotion (VI, 30); on Krshna identified with Brahman (VI, 31); on the nature of Bráhman (VI, 32); on Krehna as the pervader of the whole universe, and as the enjoyer of all sacrifice (VI, 33); on Krshna as the source of the gods, etc. Arjuna believed what Krehna said, and what also had been said by all the R., and the D.-r. Narada, and Asita Devala and Vyūsa. Krehņa declared his divine perfections to Arjuna (VI, 34), and disclosed his supreme sovereign form; he was praised by Arjuna (VI, 35); he discoursed on the two kinds of worshippers (VI, 36); on the body and the soul, etc., the supreme object of knowledge (VI, 37); on the three gunas (Goodness, Passion, and Darkness) (VI, 38); on the symbolical Acrattha (VI, 39); on godlike and demoniac natures and births (VI, 40); on the threefold nature of faith (VI, 41); on renunciation and abandonment. -Arjuna's delusion is destroyed, and he once more takes up the Gandiva (VI, 42).

Bhagavadyāna(m) ("the journey of Kṛshṇa").

I, 2, 331, i.e. Bhagavadyānaparvan.

Bhagavad-yana(m) ("the departure of Krshna"). § 262 (Sabhākr.): Krshna, after some time, desirous of beholding his father, left Khāndaraprastha, having taken leave of Prtha, Subhadra, Krehna, and Dhaumya. The Pandavas, etc., followed him half a yojana, Yudhishthira causing Daruka to stand aside and, himself taking the reins, riding on Krehna's golden chariot with Garuda on the banner, and yoked with Caivya and Sugriva. Then he caused them to retire, and with Sattvata (PCR. has Satyaki) and Daruka reached Douraka, worshipped by Ugrasena, etc.; and having embraced Pradyumna, Camba, Nicatha, Carudeshna, Gada, Aniruddha, and Bhanu, and having worshipped Ahuka and (? BR. here takes Ahuka to be the name of his father) his old father and mother and Bala, he entered the dwelling of Rukmini. Yudhishthira at Indraprastha sported with Draupadi, dismissing all his friends, brothers, and sons (II, 2).

[Bhagavadyanaparvan] ("the section relating to the journey of Krshna," the 62nd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Bhagavadyana). § 562: Yudhishthira spoke to Krshna about the mission of Sanjaya and the wickedness of Duryodhana and Dhrtarachtra; though he was supported by the Kūçis, etc. (a), he asked for only five villages (Avisthala, etc., B) or towns, and complained of the cruel duties of the kshattriya order. Krshna said he was willing to go to the Kuru court in order to negotiate a peace, and Yudhishthira, after some hesitation, agreed to the proposal (V, 72). Krehns mentioned the offences of the Kaurevas, and said that he thought war to be certain; all the omens pointed in that direction; therefore Yudhuhthira should collect everything needed for battle (V; 73). Bhims told Krehns to speak mildly and not threaten the Kurus with war. "Just as, when Dharma became extinct, Kali was born in the race of the Aswas, who flourished with prosperity and blazed with energy, so was Udavarta born among the Haihayas, etc. (7). These vile individuals sprang up, at the end of each yuga, in their respective races for the destruction of their kinsmen; so has Duryodhana been born at the end of the yuga among us the Kurus. Yudhishthira and Arjuna too are averse from war" (V, 74). Krshna scoffed at Bhims for his unusual mildness, though he had sworn, as the sun journeyed around Moru, to slay Duryodhana with his mace (V. 75). Bhima mentioned his well-known valour, and said that he was for bearing their injuries, only for fear lest the Bharata race might be extirpated (V, 76). Krohns explained that he had only spoken through affection (V, 77). Arjuna told Krshņa to strive sincerely to bring about peace; for he was able to do whatever he would; but if Krehna deemed the destruction of the Kurus to be preferable, "let it be effected soon"; he mentioned the offences of Duryodhana towards themselves and Draupadi. At all events, Krehna best knew what was for their good (V, 78). Krshna said he would try to bring about what was beneficial to both the Pandavas and the Kurus; to make peace was within his power; he would do all that could be done by human exertion, but he could not control destiny; Duryodhana, etc. ( $\delta$ ), would never make peace by giving up the kingdom; many a time he had tried to withdraw Krshna from Arjuna; about a year ago, on the occasion of attacking Virata's kine, Bhishma had solicited Duryodhana about this very peace (V, 79). Nakula told Krahns to act according to his own opinion, disregarding all he had heard. Their attachment for the kingdom was now greater than ever, as nobody could encounter Yudhishthira, etc. ( $\epsilon$ ). He should first speak mildly and then threaten Duryodhana. He did not doubt that he would accomplish his object, for Vidura, etc. (ζ), would understand him (V, 80). Sahadeva said that Krehna ought to provoke a war, because of the insults to Draupadi. Satyaki approved of this, and thus did all the heroes present (V, 81). Kreked approved of the words of Sahadeva and Sātyaki, mentioned weeping the injustice of the Dhartarashtras, and that they had refused to give even five villages, Avisthala, etc. ( $\zeta$ ), and was of opinion that there was no necessity for going thither in order to make peace. Krshna consoled her: "Thou wilt soon see thy husbands slay their enemies, and crowned by prosperity" (V, 82). Arjuna once more besought Krshna to try to make peace. On the next morning, at the Maitra hour, in the month of Kaumuda (Karttika), under the constellation Revail, at the season of dews, Autumn having departed (description), Krshna caused Cini's grandson Satyaki to prepare his chariot (description); they yoked to it Caibya, Sugrive, Meghapushpa, and Balahaka. Garuda came and perched on the flagetaff. And taking Satyaki also upon it, he set out under auspicious omens; Vasishtha, etc.  $(\eta)$ , and D.-r. and B.-r. (devabrahmarshayaç caiva) walked around him (pradakshinam avariants). Yudhishthirs, etc. ( $\theta$ ), followed him on the way, and told him to salute Kunti, etc. (1). Arjuna said he was for peace, but if Duryodhana would not give them what they demanded, he would annihilate the Kshattriya race. Bkims uttered a terrible shout, so that the bowmen trembled in fear, and steeds and elephants were seen to void urine and faces. When all the kings had desisted following bim, Krehna set out with Daruka. On his way he met with some Rehie, and Jamadagni's son, the friend of Brahman (Surasurapates), told him that the D.-r., brahmans, and R.-r., who had witnessed the former feats of gods and Asuras (devāsurasya drashtārah purānasya), had come to see and hear the assemblage at Hastinapura (V, 83). Ten chariot-warriors followed in Krshna's train, and 100 foot-soldiers and attendants by hundreds, carrying provisions in abundance. Sinister omens occurred over Hastinapura; but where Krshaa passed everything became auspicious. At Vrkasthala he passed the night (V, 84). Meanwhile Dhrtarashtra, having heard from his spies that Krehna was coming, respectfully addressed Bhishma, etc. (x), and said to Duryodhana and his counsellors that Krshna ("the lord of all creatures," etc.) should be received with the greatest honour; "lot pavilions be set up on the road," etc. Bhishma, etc., approved of it, and Duryodhana made the arrangements. But Krehna did not even glance at it (V, 85). When Krehna was staying at Vrkaethala and intended to come to Hastinapura the next morning, Dhrtarashtra spoke to Vidura about how he intended to treat Krshna in order to honour him (V, 86). Vidura blamed Dhrtarashtra for his insincerity; "the right hospitality to be offered to Krshna is to make peace with the Pandaras, and thou wilt not give them even five villages, and seekest only to separate Krehna from the Pandaras" (V, 87). Duryodhana said that it was of no use to bestow wealth and honour upon Krehns, as he could never be separated from the Pandavas, "and he will only think that we are worshipping him out of fear." Bhishma advised them to do as Krshna would say. Duryodhana declared that he would imprison Rrehna. Dhrtaraehtra and all his counsellors became deeply afflicted, especially as Krshna came as an ambassador. Inflamed with rage, Bhishma rose and left the place (V, 88). The next morning Krehna rose at daybreak and arrived in Hastinapura, and was solemnly received by all the Dhartarashiras (except Duryodhana), etc. ( $\lambda$ ), and the citizens (description). Having saluted Dhrtarashtra, etc. (#), he went to the abode of Vidura (V, 89). In the afternoon he visited Kunti, who wept for her sons, comparing Yudkishthira to Ambarisha, etc. (v), mentioning the feats of Bhimasens (o), comparing Arjuna to Kartavirya, etc. ( $\pi$ ), and also inquiring about Sahadeva and Nakula, and likewise about Draupadi (whom she had not seen for fourteen long years), mentioning how she was dragged by Duhçasana, while Bāhlika, etc.  $(\rho)$ , grieved; but especially she praised Vidura. "Full 14 years have gone since Duryodhana first exiled my son." She mentioned the invisible voice on the night of Arjuna's birth, and trusted to Dharma and the Creaton and Krshna. She asked Krshna to tell her sons that she besought them to avenge themselves and Draupadi, as even death was better than a life gained by meanness. Krshna consoled, her, and then departed for Duryodhana's mansion (V, 90). Kringa entered Duryodhana's palace (description), where he also beheld Duhçasana, Karna, and Cakuni. Duryodhana asked him to dine at his house; but Krehna did not accept the invitation. because he hated the Pandavas, and went to Vidura's abode, where Dropa, etc. ( $\sigma$ ), came to him ( $\nabla$ , 91). Vidura warned Krehna against Duryodhana, who would never make peace, because he trusted Bhishma, etc. (7), and distrusted Kashas (V, 92). Krehna said that he knew Duryodhana; but great would be the merit carned by him who liberates the whole earth from the noose of death; and even if he should meet failure, the merit of that intended act would become his;

"moreover, I have come here in order that unrighteous, foolish, and inimical persons shall not afterwards be free to say that Arshaa made no attempt to restrain them from slaughtering one another, though he was competent to do so." Then he laid himself down for sleep (V, 93). In the morning Duryodhana and Cakuni came and invited him to go to the council where Dhrtarashira and Bhishma, etc., were present; he rode thither in his chariot with Daruka, putting on his gem Kaustubha, and being protected by the Fraksis, and he was followed by Vidura in his own chariot, and by Duryodhana and Cakuni in one chariot, and by Satyaki and Krtavarman and the other chariot-warriors of the Vrehni race in chariots and on steeds and elephants (description). Then he entered the court with Vidura and Satyaki; before him eat Kurna and Duryodhana, behind him the Vrehnie with Krtavarman. Bhishma, Drong, etc., with Dhrtarashtra rose up in his honour, etc. He beheld the Redie staying in the skies with Narada at their head, and caused Bhishma to offer them scats. Dubçasana gave a scat to Satyaki, and Vicimcati one to Kriavarman (V, 94). Krehna spoke of the just complaints and claims of the Pandavas, and said that with them as his allies Dhrtarashtra would become invincible, having Bhishma, etc. (v). "Let not the peoples of the earth be exterminated! If thou regainest thy natural disposition, the earth may continue to be peopled as now." All the kings there present highly applauded the words of Krshna in their hearts, but none of them ventured to say anything in the presence of Duryodhana (V, 95).—§ 563: Jāmadagnya then told Dambhodbhavopākhyana (q.v.). "Great, indeed, was that feat of old achieved by Nara. Narayana again became superior to Nara in consequence of many additional qualities. Therefore, O king, before such weapons as Kūkudika, etc. (φ), are placed on the string of the Gandira, go thou to Dhunanjaya, laying aside thy pride!" These weapons have other names corresponding to the eight passions (lust, wrath, etc.; description) (V, 96). - § 564: Mataliyopakhyana (q.v.). - § 565: After Kanva had spoken, Krehna, Bhishma, and Narada in vain admonished Duryodhana. Narada related the old story Gulavacarita (q.v.), and-§ 566: The fall of Yayati (q.v.).- § 567: Dhrtarashtra complained that Duryodhana never listened to his, etc. (a), words, and asked Krshna to admonish him. Krshna reminded Duryodhana of what was agreeable to Dhrtarashtra, etc. ( $\beta$ ), and warned him against Duḥçūsana, etc. (4). Bhīshma, etc. (8), could not fight against Bhima and Arjuna, who had rauquished D., G., Y., As., and Pn. at Khandaraprastha; who encountered many at Virata's city, etc. (e) (V, 124). Bhishnes. Drona, Vidura, and Dhriardshira recommended Duryodhana to follow the counsels of Krshna (V. 125). Bhishma and Dona warned Duryodhana against Krehna, etc. (3) (V, 126). Duryodhana complained that Krahna always consured him; in the match of dice blame could not be attached to him. He quoted this saying of Matanga, "one should always keep himself erect . . . " (V, 127). Krshna indignantly answered Duryodhana, mentioning his offences against the Pandavas, Varanavata, etc. (1). Duhçasana said to Duryodhana that the Kauraras would bind him, and Bhishma, Drona, and Dhrtarushtra would make Duryodhana, Karna, and Duhçusana over to the Pandavas. Disregarding Vidura, etc. (0), Duryodhana went out of the court in anger. Krehne blamed thom for not having forcibly seized and bound Duryedhana; "I think the time has come for doing this"; he reminded them of how he had himself slain Kamea, and then installed Ugracena on the throne, for the benefit of all the Yadavas, Andhakas, and Frehnis; and that when the gods and Asuras, etc. (1), were arrayed for battle Parameshihin had commanded Dharma to bind the Daileyas and the Danavas and make them over to Varuna, who having bound them with Dharma's noose and also with his own, kept them within the depths of the ocean. In the same way they ought to bind Duryodhana, etc. (x) (V, 128). Dhriarashtra caused Vidura to fotch Gandhari, who blamed Dhitardehtra, because he had by his indulgence caused Duryodhans now to be the slave of delusion and incapable of being turned back; she then caused Vidura to fetch Duryodhana, whom she rebuked severely and asked to obey the words of his well-wishers Dhrtardshtra, etc. ( $\lambda$ ); Bhishma and Dhriardshira and Bahlika [formerly] gave the Pandavas their share from foar of a disunion. If Bhishma, etc. ( $\mu$ ), became enraged the population of the earth would be exterminated. The affection of Bhishma, Drona, and Krpa towards the Pandavas and the Dhartardshiras was equal; "it is never seen in this world that men acquire wealth by avarice" (V, 129). Disregarding the words of his mother, Duryodhana again went away in anger, and began to consult with Cakuni, and Duryodhana, etc. (v), resolved upon seising Arshna; then the Pandavas with the Somakas would become depressed. Satyaki knew it, caused Krtavarman to array the troops at the entrance of the court, and informed Krehna, Dhriarashtra, and Vidura, but laughed at the project. Vidura told Dhrtarashira that the last hour of all his sons was at hand. Krehna said to Dhrtardehtra that if his sons perpetrated such a deed Yudhishthira's object would be accomplished, "for this very day, seizing them with all who follow them, I can make them over to the Pandarus; I will not, however, commit any such censurable deed that can proceed only from wrath and a sinful understanding." Dhrtarashtra once more caused Vidura to fetch Duryedhana with his brothers, etc., and rebuked them; "dost thou not know Krshna, who is incapable of being defeated in battle by D., men, G., As., and U.?" Vidura reminded Duryodhana that at the gates of Saubha the monkey Drivida covered Krshna with a shower of stones, but could not seize him; nor could Naraka with all the Danaras at Pragjyotisha; slaying Naraka, Krehna brought away 1,000 damsels and married them all. In the city of Nirmocana 6,000 mighty Asuras failed to seize him with their noses. He also mentioned Parand Çakuni, etc. (f) (V, 130). Krehņa reminded Duryedhana that he was not alone, and from his body issued myriads of gods, etc. (o); all the kings were terrified and closed their eyes, except Bhishma, Drona, Vidura, Saiijaya, and the Rehis; for Krshaa gave thom celestial sight, etc. Then he went out with Satyaki and Krtavarman. The Rehie Narada, ctc., vanished. He found Daruka waiting with his chariot (description) drawn by Caibya, and Krtararman, who had mounted his chariot. Dhrtardshtra excused himself, saying that he was powerless. Krshna bade farewell to Dhrtarashtra, etc.  $(\pi)$ , and set out, followed by Bhishma, etc.  $(\rho)$ , to the abode of Kunti (V, 131). Kunti asked him to admonish Yudhishthira to attend to the auties of his own order, and not contemplate virtue alone ("thy virtue is decreasing greatly"), citing Mucukunda (b). It is the king that creates the Krta, Treta, or Deapara age; if he creates the Krta age, he enjoys heaven exceedingly; if he creates the Treta, he enjoys heaven, but not exceedingly; if he causes the Drapara age to set in, he enjoys heaven according to his due; if he promotes the Kali age, he will reside in hell for countless years. "That understanding according to which thou art now acting, is not in accordance with the intentions of Pandu, or myself, or thy grandsire, when we uttered blessings on thee before," etc. (V, 132). "In this connection is cited an old story: § 568. Vidulāputraçāsana" (q.v.).—§ 569: Kunti asked Krshna to remind Arjuna of the voice heard at his birth (that he should rival Indra, vanquish the Kurus, conquer the earth aided by Bkima; slay the Kurus in battle with Krehna as his ally, and recover his share in the kingdom, and, with his brothers, perform three great sacrifices); to Bhima he should say that "the time has come for that in view of which a kshattriya lady brings forth a son"; Krennd he should praise for her behaviour towards the Pandavas; he should remind Nakula and Sahadeva, that they must not forgive the insults towards Draupadi, that was worse than the defeat at dice and the exile; Arjuna should always tread in the path pointed out by Draupadi; Phima and Ariuna are a pair of Yamas capable of slaying the very gods; they should revenge the harsh words said by Dulcasana to Bhima. Krahna bade farewell to Bhishma, etc., took Karna upon his chariot and set out with Satyaki, deliberating with Karna for a long time. Then he dismissed Karna, and driven by Daraka the steeds soon reached Upoplavya. The Kurus assembled an I talked about Krshna (V, 137). Bhishma and Drona reminded Duryoshana of what Kunti had said to Krshna, and the exploits of Arjuna; they recommended peace; fearful omens appeared (V, 138). Duryodhana was cheerless and silent. Bhishma complained. Drong said that his affection for Arjuna was greater than for Agratthaman; Duryodhana ought to have followed the counsels of the olders; Yudhishihira was invincible; the Pandaras had procured wealth from Kubera's abode; "the periods of our lives have run out"; etc. (V, 139). Requested by Dhrtarāshtra, Sanjaya related the conversation between Krshna and Karna (see the note of PCR.). Krshna disclosed to Karna that he was virtually the son of Pandu, and on the side of his father was related to the Pandaras, on the side of his mother to the Vrshnis. He ought to come with him to the Pandavas, being the elder brother of Yudhishthira, and be installed as king by Dhaumya, etc. (a), Yudhishthira being his hoir-presumptive and ruling the kingdom under him; "during the sixth period DraupadI also will come to thee"; "let the Dravidus, etc. (3), walk before thee" (V, 140). Karna admitted that he was virtually the son of Pandu, Kunti having, while a maiden, born him to Sarya and then abandoned him. But the Sata Adhiratha had taken him to his home; from her affection for him Radha's breasts were filled with milk that very day, and she held his urine and fæces; "how can one like us . . . deprive her of her pinda?" Adhiratha regarded Karna as a son, and Karna regarded Adhiratha as a father; he had caused all the rites of infancy to be performed on Karna according to the scriptures; he had caused the name Vasushena to be bestowed upon him by the brahmans; when Karna attained to youth he married wives according to Adhiratha's selection; with them he had begotten sons and grandsons. Through Duryodhana he had enjoyed sovereignty for thirtcen years. His many sacrifices had always been with Sutas, as had also his family rites and marriage rites. It was only after having got hold of Karna that Duryodhana had decided upon war with the Pandaras, Karna having been chosen as the antagonist of Arjuna. Their discourse ought to be kept secret, lest Yudhishire should refuse to accept the kingdom; and "if the empire becomes mine I shall certainly make it over to Duryodhana only." He praised Yudhishihira, etc. (4), and the weapons of Arjuna (8), comparing the combat to a sacrifice; and Bhima's drinking the blood of Duncasana to the Soma-drinking, etc. (V, 141). Krehna said the victory of the Pandavas was very certain; he described Arjuna's banner, made by Bhaumana by celestial illusion; his Aindra, Agneya, and Maruta weapons, etc.; "then all signs of the Krta, Treta, and Deapara ages will disappear." He forebade Bhimasena's dancing, having quaffed the blood of Duhçusana, etc. (e). "Returning hence, say to Bhishma, etc. (5), that the present month is o delightful one; 7 days hence it will be the day of the new moon, presided over by Indra; let the battle commence then" (V. 142). Karna ascribed the approaching destruction to Cakuni, etc. (1), and mentioned diverse sinister visions of planets (3), etc., and he had seen in a vision, foreboding victory, Yudhishthira, etc. (1), and the inverse respecting Bhishma, etc. (a). " Marna embraced Krehna, descended from his chariot, and riding in his own chariot, which was decked with gold, came back with us" (V, 143). Vidura approached Kunti and spoke of the state and disposition of Yudhishthira, etc. (1), and the allies of Yudhishthira ( $\mu$ ). Kunti thought with grief on those who were going to fight (v). Especially she was afraid of Karna; she recollected the boon of Durvasas and its consequences (£). She went to Karna, who was standing performing his prayers on the bank of Ganga with his face turned towards the east and his arms upraised; and she stayed behind him. waiting for the completion of his prayers. Then, turning round, he beheld Kunti (V, 144). Kunti disclosed to Karna his birth, mentioned the justice of the Pandara cause and the injustice of Duryodhana's, and besought him to join the Pandacas (V, 145). Surya corroborated the words of Kunti. But Karna represented to her the great injury she had done him; he could not now frustrate the hope of the Kauravas; but "except Arjuna thy other sons shall not be slain by me." They then left the spot, turning into different directions (V. 146). At Upcplaya Krekna represented to the Pandagas all that had happened at Hastinapura. In the night, Yudhishthira again brought Krehna into their midst, and caused him to repeat what had been said by Bhishma, etc. (o); Bhishma had related his own life  $(\pi)$ ; he mentioned a duel with Rāma [Jāmadagnya], whore Vicitravīrya fled, having been deserted by his subjects; upon Vicilravirya's death anarchy prevailed in the kingdom, and Indra did not give a drop of rain; afflicted by hunger and maladies (very few of them were still alive), the subjects then asked Bhishma -in vain-to ascend the throne; "when Pandu became king, his sons must obtain their paternal inheritance" (V. 147). Drong had related the life of Pandu. Vidura had asked Bhishma to go to the woods with rim and Dhrtarashtra, or to bind Duryodhana and rule the kingdom with the Pandayas. Gandhari proved that the kingdom by right belonged to the Pandavas and their sons and grandsons, and to no others (V, 148). Dhrtardshtra had repeated to Duryodhana the genealogy of the Kuru race from Soma, mentioning especially that Yayati (b) had placed his youngest son Paru on the throne; and that Derapi's installation was forbidden by the brahmans and all aged persons because of a skin disease (leprosy, Nil.), and as Bahlika abandoned his father and brother and obtained the wealthy kingdom of his maternal uncle, Cantanu, the youngest of the three brothers, became king. "Being defective of a limb, I was likewise excluded by Pāṇḍu; at his death the kingdom must pass to his sons... thou art not the son of a king, and therefore hast no right to the kingdom" (V, 149). Kṛshṇa continued his relation; Duryodhana had repeatedly instructed the kings, saying: "To-day is Pushya [in conjunction with the moon]; march ye." "Eleven akshauhinis have been assembled headed by Bhīshma (with the device of the palmyra in his banner)" (V, 150).

He had 100. sons. Indra began to look for an occasion against him. Once, on a hunting expedition, he was bewildered by Indra, and, afflicted with thirst, he plunged into a lake after having caused his horse to drink, and found himself changed into a woman. He took leave of his wives and children and retired to the woods, joined an ascetic and bore him 100 sons, whom he took to his former children, and made-them all enjoy the kingdom as their joint property. Filled with rage, Indra, in the form of a brahman, repaired to Bhanguevana's capital, and, referring them to the example of the gods and the Asuras (the children of Kacyapa), caused the half-brothers to slay each other. Then, in the form of a brahman, he came to the spot where Bhangasvana lived as an ascetic lady, afflicted with grief, and told him that he was Indra, and why he was - angry, but was gratified and granted him a boon. Ho asked that those sons of his should revive that were born by him as a woman, because the affection entertained by a woman is much greater than that which is entertained by a man. Indra revived all his children, and told him to choose whichever sex he liked, that of woman or that of man. He chose to remain a woman, because in sexual intercourse the pleasure that women enjoy is always much greater than what is enjoyed by men. Indra proceeded to heaven (XIII, 12).

it was called Pināka, and threw Uçanas into his mouth and swallowed him, and Uçanas began to wander there. Mahādova entered the waters and remained there like an immovable stake of wood for millions of years. Then he rose from the mighty lake and Brahmán approached him. Çiva saw that Uçanas within his stomach (Nil.) had become greater in consequence of those penances of his. He once more betook himself to yoga-meditation. Uçanas, filled with anxiety, began to wander within his stomach, and to sing his praises; but Rudra had stopped all his outlets; at last he let him go out through his urethra. Thence he came to be called Çukra, and became unable to attain the central point of the firmament. Uma prevented Çiva from slaying him, and Uçanas became her son (XII, 290).

After having bathed in a lake, he blew his shell and began to proceed into a plaintain wood, but was arrested by his brother the ape Hanumat, who for his good obstructed the way to heaven (divangamam margam), saying that this was the path to the devaloka, impassable by mortals, save the way of siddhi (siddhigatim) (III, 146). Bhīmasenarasapāna(m) ("Bhīma's drinking the magic draught"). § 197 (Sambhavap.): The Pandavas were far superior in strength and skill to the Dhartarashtras, and Bhima tormented the Dhartarashtras. Duryodhana then built a palace (Udakakridana) at Pramanakoti, on the banks of the Ganga, in order to sport in the water there. There he invited the Pandaras and poured kalakataka poison into the food of Bhima, and when Bhima had lost his senses, Duryodhana bound him and threw him into the water, where he sunk down to the dwelling of the Nagas, who bit him, but could not penetrate his thick skin. The immovable (i.e. vegetable) kālakūtaka poison was neutralised by the movable (i.e. animal) serpent poison. Bhīma awoke and began to crush the serpents. until Vasuki came, and, informed by Aryaka that he was the daughter's son of Aryaka's daughter's son, let him drink as much of their rasa (containing the strength of 1,000 elephants (serpents?) in each kunda) as he could. He drank eight kundas, and then was laid on a bed (1, 128). When the Kauravas and Pandavas had returned to Hastinapura, Yudhishthira ("himself unacquainted with wickedness, and regarding others as honest as himself," v. 5037) asked Kuntī if Bhima had come home. Vidura consoled her. On the eighth day Bhima awoke from his slumber, bathed in the holy waters, ate of the paramanna (rice boiled in milk with sugar), ctc., and was placed by the Nagas in the same gardens, whence he ran home. Yudhishthira ordered him to keep silence on this accident, and the Pandaras [ with Vidura's advice] became very vigilant from this day (the words in brackets are from B., where also v. 5068a is placed after v. 5070a). [sārathim cāsya dayitam apahastena jaghnivān (see BR., s.v. apahasta, cf. iii, v. 545). Duryodhana again poured kālakāţaka poison into the food of Bhima. Yuyutsu informed the Pandaras of this; but Bhima swallowed the poison and digested it, and it produced no change in him.]-Duryodhana, Karna, and Cakuni had recourse to numerous other contrivances in order to kill the Pandavas, who, though knowing it, yet, in accordance with the advice of Fidura. suppressed their indignation. Seeing the princes passing their time in play, Dhrtarashtra appointed Gautama (i.e. Krpa, born in a thicket of roods and well skilled in the meaning of the Vedas and castras) as their preceptor (I, 129).

[Bhishmavadhaparvan] ("the section relating to the slaying of Bhishma," the 70th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Bhishmavadha). § 577: Beholding Arjuna again taking up the Gandiva, the Pandavas and Somakas were filled with joy and blow their conches, etc. D., G., P., Si., Ca., and R. came with Indra in order to behold the fight. Putting off his coat of mail, etc., Yudhishthira, followed by his brothers (a) (who did not know his intentions) and Krshna, proceeded on foot, with joined hands, to Thishma, etc. (3), one ufter another, and asked their permission to fight. He also inquired about the means of vanquishing Bhishma and Drona, and as they said that they were invincible he asked them to indicate the means of killing them. They gave the permission. said they would pray for his victory, though they were bound by the wealth of the Kurus to fight for them. Bhishma said that his time of death had not yet come, he must come to see him once more. Drong said that if he did not give himself up to death and drop his weapons nobody would be able to slay him; he would drop his arms if he heard something very disagreeable from someone whose speech was trustworthy. Krpa said he was incapable of being slain. Calya renewed his promise to weaken the energy of Karna. When the Kauravas saw Yudhishthira, they contemned him, believing that he had come in terror. Krshna endeavoured to bring Karna over to the Pandavas, as long as Bhishma was not slain. but in vain. Yudhishthira exclaimed, "He who chooses us, him we will choose for our ally"; Yuyutsu went over to the Pandavas, and Yudhishthira said that the propagation of Dhrtarashtra's lineage and his craddha oblations rested on him. The Mleochas and Aryans wept for joy at the behaviour of the Pandavas, and blew their conches, etc. (VI, 43).- § 578: The first day's encounter: Duhçasana advanced with his troops with Bhishma at their head, and the Pandavas headed by Bhimasens, who reared frightfully. Duryodhana, etc. (a), attacked Bhimasena. The Draupadeyas, etc. ( $\beta$ ), rushed against the Dhartarashtras. The disciples of Drong always hit the mark (VI, 44). (1) Bhishma attacked Arjuna; (2) Sütyaki attacked Krtavarman; (3) Abhimanyu fought with Brhadbala; (4) Bhīmasens struggled with Duryodhana; (5) Duhçusana fought with Nakula; (6) Durmukha fought with Sahadeva; (7) Yudhishthira fought with the Madra king (Calya); (8)

Dhrehtadyumna attacked Drona; (9) Çankha encountered Somadatta's son; (10) Dhrshtaketu (the king of the Cedis) encountered Bahlika, they looked like the planets Anguraka (Mars) and Budha (Mercury); (11) Ghatotkaos encountered Alambusha; (12) Çikhandin encountered Açratthaman; (18) Virața attacked Bhagadatta; (14) Krpa attacked the Kaikeya king Brhatkshattra; (15) Drupada attacked the Sindhu king Jayadratha, they resembled the planets Cukra (Venus) and Angaraka (Mars); (16) Vikarna (son of Dhrtarashtra) attucked Sutasoma; (17) Cekitana, who sided with the Pāndavas, attacked Suçarman; (18) Çakuni attacked Prativindhya; (19) Crutakarman (the son of Sahadeva) attacked the Kamboja king Sudakshina, and stood like the Mainaka mountain; (20) Iravat (son of Arjuna) attacked Crutayus; (21) the two princes of Avanti, Vinda and Anuvinda, oncountered Kuntibhoja with his son; (22) the Kekaya-brothers encountered the five Gandhara-princes; (23) Virabahu (son of Dhylardshira) encountered Utlara (the son of Firaja); (24) The Codi king attacked Uluka. Thousands of single combats took place. D.-r., Si., and Ca. beheld the battle, which resembled the combat of D. and As. (VI, 45). The Pandavas and the Kurus fought as if they were possessed by demons. The divisions of the Pandavas, approaching Bhishma (b), began to yield (VI, 48). (25) After the greater part of the forenoon had worn out, Durmukha, etc.  $(\gamma)$ , began to protect Bhishma, who rushed upon the Codis, etc. (8). (26) Then Abhimanyu (o) attucked Bhishma, Krtavarman, Çalya, Durmukha (cutting off the head of his charioteer), and Krpa (cutting in two his bow); he was regarded as equal to Arjuna, and his bow sent forth a twang like that of the Gundiva: he stood firm like the Mainaka mountain. When Bhishma's standard fell down, Bhima shouted. Bhishma used celestial weapons. (27) In order to protect Abhimanyu, Virata, etc. (c), attacked Bhishma, who wounded Dhrshtadyumna and Satyaki, and they cut off the standard of Bhimasena (d), who wounded Bhishma and Krpa and Krtavarman. (28) Mounted on an elephant, Uttara (the son of Virata) attacked the Madra king Calya, whose steeds were killed by the elephant; Calya, with a dart, deprived Uttara of his senses, and mounted the chariot of Kriavarman. (29) Seeing his brother Uttara slain and Calya staying with Krtavarman, Cveta (the son of Virafa) attacked Calya. (30) The Kosala king Brhadbala, etc. (5), attacked Cveta in order to protect Calya; Cveta wounded Rukmaratha, who was borne away by his charioteer. (31) Then Duryodhana, with Bhishma. etc., attacked Cveta and rescued Calya; Bhishma shot at Abhimanyu, etc. (7) (VI, 47). The Pandavas, with Cikhandin, desired to rescue the generalissimo Creta and attacked Bhishma. The Kurus retreated from fear, and abandoned Bhishma. (32) Duryodhana averted Çveta from Phishma, and was routed; (33) Creta once more attacked Bhishma, whose standard he cut down; (34) then Bahlika, etc. (0), attacked Crota in order to protect Bhishma, whose chariot Creta reduced to ashes, with standard, etc.; (35) Calya, etc., rushed to Bhishma's rescue; a voice in the skies admonished Bhishma to hasten the death of Creta. (36) Satyaki, etc. (x), rushed to the rescue of Cveta. Bhishma, etc. (A), checked them. With a shaft endued with the force of the Brahma weapon, seen by D., G., P., U., and Ra., Bhishma shot Cveta to death. The Pandavas (with Cikhandin) lamented; the Kurus rejoiced; Dungasana danced for joy. Ariuna and Krehna withdrew the troops, the same did the Kurus (VI, 48). (37) When Costs had been slain, Virața's son Çankha, on beholding Çalya standing with Krisvarman, attacked Çalya; (38) Bhishma attacked Çankha; (39) Arjuna placed himself in front of Cankha and attacked Bhishma; (40) Calya, mace in hand, slew the steeds of Cankha, who mounted Arjuna's chariot. (41) Bhishma with his arrows slaughtered the Pañoula hosts, etc. (µ), abandoned Ariuna, and attacked Drupada. The Pandavas were routed. the sun set, and the Pandavas withdrew their forces (VI, 49). Seeing Bhishma's (and Drona's) prowess, Yudhishthira complained before Krshaa, and spoke of retiring into the woods. Bhims alone, he said, fought in accordance with kshattriys duties; Arjuna was indifferent. Krahna consoled him, saying that he had got Satyaki, etc. (v), and that Cikhandin was certainly the slayer of Bhishma. Yudhishthira then addressed Dhrshtadyumna, saying that he himself and Bhima. etc. (E), would follow him. Dhrehtadyumna said that he had been appointed by Cambhu to slay Drona and to fight against Bhishma, etc. (o). Yudhishthira recommended the array called Krauncaruna, which Brhaspati had explained to Indra in days of old, when the gods and the Asuras fought, but which had never been seen before. When morning dawned. Dhrehtadyumna placed Arjuna (e) in the van of the army, and Drupada became the head [of the array], etc.  $(\pi)$  (VI, 50). Seeing the Kraunca of the Pandavas, Duryodhana, approaching Bhishma, etc. (p), gladdened them all, saying that their army, which was protected by Bhishma, was immeasurable, while that of the Pandavas, protected by Bhima, was measurable. The Samsthanas, etc. (σ), should protect Bhishma. Bhishma. Drong, and the Dhartardshiras formed a mighty array. Bhishma was followed by Drona with the Kuntalas, etc. (7). Cakuni protected Drong. Followed by his brothers and the Acvatakas. etc. (v), Duryodhana advanced against the Pandava host. Bhūricravas, etc.  $(\phi)$ , protected the left flank; Somadatta, etc.  $(\chi)$ , the right; Acceptathaman, etc.  $(\psi)$ , were in the rear; behind them Ketumat, etc. (w). Bhishma and the others blew their conches, etc. Krehna, etc. (aa), blew their conches (Krehna blew Pañoajanya, etc.). The Kurus and Pandavas marched against each other in order to renew the battle (VI, 51). - § 579: SECOND DAY: Duryodhana began the battle. (1) Bhishma shot at Abhimanyu, etc. (a); Arjuna told Krehna to take his chariot before Bhishma; "protected by Bhishma, Drona, etc. ( $\beta$ ), will slaughter the Pañoalas." Only Bhishma, Drong, and Karna could encounter Arjuna. Bhishma was protected by Saindhava (i.e. Jayadratha), etc. ( $\gamma$ ). Bhishma, etc. ( $\delta$ ), struck Arjuna, who struck Bhishma, etc. (e). Satyaki, etc. (f), surrounded Arjuna. (2) The Pañcala prince and the Somakas attacked Drons. (3) Bhishms fought with Arjuns, at the request of Duryodhana, who complained of the absence of Karna; Acvatthaman, etc. (7), stood for battle; Bhishma wounded Krshna; D., G., Ca., and great R. said they would be invincible by all the worlds with D., As., and G. (4) See 2 (VI. 52): Continuation of the combat between Drona and Dhrshfadyumna. (5) Bhima attacked Dronn in order to aid Dhrshfadyumna, whom he caused to be taken up on another chariot. (6) Urged by Duryodhana, the Kalinga king rushed against Bhims in order to protect Drons. (7) Drons abandoned Dhrehtadyumna and encountered Virata and Drupada. (8) Dhrehladyumna proceeded to support Yudhishthira. (9) See 6 (VI, 53): Bhimasens was supported by the Cedia; the Kalinga king by Ketumat (son of the Nishada king; rajaputral, v. 2354) and Crutayue. The Cedie, etc. (0), attacked the Nishadas. (10) The Codie left Bhimasons and turned back; the Kalinga king and his son Cakradera fought with Bhima, who slew Cakradera with his mace. (11) Bhima attacked Bhanumat (the prince of the Kalingas), and slew him with his sword, dividing him in the middle, and made a great slaughter of men and elephants. (12) Beholding Crutayus (the ruler of the Kalingas) at the head of the Kalinga troops, Bhimasena attacked him, was wounded, and taken into his chariot by the charioteer Açoka; once more he fought with Crutayus, and slow him, and Satyadova, and Satya, and Kotumat, and routed the Kalingas. (13) When, however, the Kalingas were rallied again, Dhrshtadyumna, with Cikhandin, Yudhishthira, etc., protected one of the wings of Bhimasena; there was nobody on earth, save Bhima and Satyaki, who was doarer to Dhrshfadyumna than his very life; they beheld Satyaki at a distance; and that [grand]son of Cini took up the wing of both Bhima and Dhrehladyumna; Bhima caused a bloody river to flow there. (14) Bhishma heard the cries, attacked Bhima, and was attacked by Satyaki, etc. (1). Bhishma jumped from his chariot, mace in hand, and was taken by Dhrehtadyumna on his chariot. Satyaki slew the charioteer of Bhishma, who was then carried away from the field of battle by his steeds. The Kalingas were totally routed by Bhima, who was praised by the Pañcalas and Mateyas, himself embraced Dhrshtadyumna, and was congratulated by Satyaki, who returned to his own chariot and began to slay the Kurus (VI, 54). (15) When the forenoon of that day had passed away, Dhrshfadyumna engaged in battle with Acceptathaman, etc.  $(\kappa)$ ; he slew the steeds of Acceptanan, who got up on Calya's car. (16) Abhimanyu quickly came up and wounded Calya, etc. ( $\lambda$ ), but was, in his turn, wounded by Acvatthaman, etc. (μ). (17) Lakshmana (the son of Duryodhana) attacked Abhimanyu. (18) Duryodhana attacked Abhimanyu in order to aid Lakshmana. (19) Arjuna engaged in battle with the Kurus, headed by Bhishma and Drona; dust and Abhimanyu's arrows produced complete darkness. The Kurus were routed. Arjuna and Krshna blow their conches. Bhishma suggested to Drona that they should withdraw the troops, and as the sun set both armies were withdrawn (VI, 55).-§ 580: THIRD DAY: (1) Next morning Bhishma formed a Garuda array; at its beak was Bhishma himself; its eyes were formed by Drona and Krtavarman; Acvatthaman, etc. (a), were at its head; Bhurigravas, etc. (3), were placed in its neck; at its back was Duryodhana and his followers; Vinda, etc.  $(\gamma)$ , formed its tail; the Magadhas, etc. ( $\delta$ ), formed the right wing; the Kārūshas, etc. (e), were stationed in the left wing. (2) Arjuna and Dhrshtadyumna formed an array in the shape of a half-moon, with Bhimasena in the right horn, etc. ( $\zeta$ ); next to Nila Dhrshjaketu, etc. ( $\eta$ ); in the middle was Dhrehtadyumna, etc. (0); on the left horn was he who had Krshna for his protector. Then the battle commenced (VI, 56). (3) Arjuna fought with the Kauravas, who could not be broken, as they were protected by Drona; and the Pandavas could not be broken, as they were protected by Arjuna and Bhima. At last Bhishma, etc. (1), broke the ranks of the Pandavas. Bhimasona, etc. (a), attacked the Kauravas and fought with Duryodhana, Bhīshma, and Drona; Abhimanyu and Satyaki attacked Cakuni (VI, 57). D., Da., G., Pc., U., and Rū. oulogized Arjuna. (4) The Gandharas, with Cakuni, fought with Satyaki (the Vrehni hero) and Abhimanyu, and destroyed the chariot of Sālyaki, who mounted Abhimanyu's chariot. (5) Drops and Bhishms attacked Yudhishthirs, and were attacked by him and the sons of Madri. (6) Bhimasons and Ghatotkaca fought with Duryodhana, who was brought away by his charioteer, and his troops fled, pursued by Bhima. (7) Dhrehtadyumna and Yudhishthira slew Drona's and Bhishma's army, which fled and could not be checked by Bhishma and Drona. (8) Abhimanyu and Caineya began to slaughter the army of Cakuni. (9) Arjuna routed the Kaurava army, and its flight could not be checked by Bhishma and Drona, but was checked by Duryedhana, who blamed Bhishma, saying that he did not sincerely fight with the Pandavas, otherwise his troops could not have been routed while Bhishma, etc. ( $\lambda$ ), were alive; had he known this unwillingness of Bhishma to fight, he would have consulted Karna. Bhishma said that the Pandavas were incapable of being vanquished by the very gods, including Indra, but he alone would check them to-day (VI, 58). (10) After the forencon of that day had passed away, Bhishma attacked the Pandavas, and a dreadful battle ensued, in which the Pandavas were routed. Arshna told Arjuna to strike Bhishma, reminding him of his vow to slav all the warriors of Dhrtarūshtra's son. headed by Bhishma and Drona. At the request of Arjuna, Krshna drove the steeds to where Bhishma was, and the army of Yudhishthira rallied for battle. Arjuna and Bhishma fought; Krahna displayed great skill in driving the horses; he and Arjuna were both wounded by Bhishma, and the Pandava army was routed; Bhishma ordered Dronn, etc. ( $\mu$ ), to attack Arjuna. (11) The grandson of Cini came to Arjuna's rescue; Krshna applauded him, and, saying that he would slay Bhishma and Drona, etc., he jumped down from the chariot with his discus Sudarçana in his hand, and rushed towards Bhishma (who welcomed him), but was held back by Arjuna, who said that he would himself slay the Kurus; he was then prevailed upon to mount the chariot once more, where he blew the Pañoajanya, while arrows were shot from the Gandiva in all directions. (12) Then Duryodhana, etc. (v), attacked Arjuna, who invoked the Mahendra weapon and checked the Kaurava host. (13) Virața, Drupada, etc., approached. Arjuna caused a river of blood to flow there with Rakshasas on its banks. Elated with victory, the Cedis, etc. (£), set up a loud shout. The Kurus, including Bhishma, etc. (o), got afraid of the Indrawoapon, and withdrew their forces at sunset. The same did Arjuna. Among the Kurus there was a great uproar: "Tho Sauviras, etc.  $(\pi)$ , have all been slain by Arjuna, and he has vanquished Crutayus, etc. (ρ)" (VI, 59). — § 581: ΤΗΕ FOURTH DAY: (1) When the night had passed away, Bhishma at the head of the army proceeded against the foe, surrounded by Drona, etc. (a). The array of the Pandavas was like that of the day before. Bhishma (b) attacked Arjuna, and so did Drong, etc. ( $\beta$ ); Abhimanyu rushed out of the ranks and proceeded against all the foes, but Bhishma avoided Abhimanyu and fought against Arjuna himself (VI, 60). (2) Açvatthaman, etc. ( $\gamma$ ), fought with Abhimanyu. (3) Urged by Duryodhana, the Trigartas, etc. (δ), attacked Arjuna and Abhimanyu. (4) Proceeding towards Arjuna, Dhrshtadyumna attacked the Madras, etc. (e), and slow Samyamani's son (VI, 61). Dhrshfadyumna fought with Çalya. (5) Abhimanyu attacked Çalya. Duryodhana, etc. (5), protected the chariot of Calya. Bhimasona, etc.  $(\eta)$ , fought with them. (6) Bhimasona, with his maco, attacked Duryodhana, who advanced with the Magadha-division, and placing the ruler of Magadha before himself, Bhimasena jumped from his chariot and slew the elephants with his mace; the Draupadeyas, etc. ( $\theta$ ), protected Bhima's rear; Abhimanyu slew the Magadha king after having slain his elephant (VI, 62). (7) Duryodhana commanded his entire army to slay Bhimasena, who crushed them with his mace, without being abandoned by Dhrehtadyumna, etc. (1). (8) Bhìshma attacked Bhìmasena. (9) Satyaki (Cinipravirah) attacked Bhishma. (10) Only the Ra. Alambusha fought with the grandson of Cini. (11) Only Somedatta's son Bhurigravas was then of good cheer; he attacked Satyaki (VI, 63). (12) Duryodhana and his brothers surrounded Somadatta's son: Bhimasena encountered the Dhartarashtras. who were headed by Duryodhana; Nandaka (Dhartarashtra) also attacked Bhimasens, who addressed his charioteer Viçoka, that he should drive the steeds with care; Duryodhana also wounded Vicoka; Duryodhana struck Bhimasena so that he swooned away. (13) The Pandara army, headed by Abhimanyu, showered arrows on Duryodhana; Bhimasena regained consciousness and fought against Duryodhana and Calya, who was borne away from the battle. (14) Fourteen Dhartarashtras, viz. Sonapati, etc. (x), encountered Bhimasona, who slew Sonapati, etc. ( $\lambda$ ); the remaining six fled. (15) Urged by Bhishma, the whole Dhartarashtra army attacked Bhimasena; the Pragjyotisha king Bhagadatta, on a huge elephant, struck Bhimasena, who fell in a swoon. (16) Then the Ra. Ghatotkaca, by help of his illusive force, appeared riding on an Airavata, followed by the other Dignagas (µ), each with four tusks and mounted by Rakehasas, and attacked Bhagadatta's elephant. (17) Bhishma urged Drona and Duryodhana to rescue Bhagadatta; all the kings, headed by Drong, proceeded to aid Bhagadatta; Yudhishthira, with the Pañcalas and Pandavas, pursued them from behind; Ghatotkaca uttered a fierce roar: Bhishma, addressing Drona. caused the army to withdraw, and so did the Pandavas with Bhimasena and Ghafotkaca. Duryodhana was afflicted with sorrow (VI, 64). Dhṛtarāshṭra complained to Sañjaya, and asked what was the cause of the victory of the Pandavas. Sanjaya explained that victory sides with righteousness, and related how Duryodhana in the night had enquired of Bhishma, on whom the Pandavas were relying to vanquish Drong, etc. (v). Bhishma had related this ancient history: In days of old all the gods and Rehis were assembled by Brahmán upon Gandhamādana; and when Brahmán, together with the Rehis and gods, beheld an excellent chariot in the sky, he hymned Narayana (F). " . . . Therefore take birth in the race of Yadu and slay the sons of Diti . . . Having created the divine Sankarshana out of thy own self by thyself, thou didst then, O Krehna, create thyself as Pradyumna, born of thyself; from Pradyumna thou didst then create Aniruddha, who is known as the eternal Vishnu; and it was Aniruddha who created me as Brahmán, the upholder of the Universe. Created out of Vasudeva, I have therefore been created by thee. Dividing thyself into portions, take birth among human beings, and slaughtering the Asuras there . . . thou wilt again truly attain to Yoga . . . "(VI, 85). Requested by D., R., and G., Brahman explained to them who Nurayana is. "Those Dai. and Da. and Ra. who were slain in battle have been born among men." The old Rahis Nara and Narayana are Arjuna and Krehna. Krehna should never be disregarded as if he were a man. This was heard by Bhishma from Rshis, etc. (o). "Never go to war with Krshus and the Pandavas; on account of thy folly thou couldst not apprebend this; I regard thee, therefore, as a wicked Rakshasa." "Where Krshna is, there is righteousness; and victory is where righteousness is . . . It is Krehas who always imparts an understanding endued with righteousness and strength in battle to the Pandavas, and who always protects them from danger . . . He it is who, towards the close of the Dvapara yuga and the beginning of the Kali yuga. is hymned by Sankarshana according to the Salvata ritual" (VI, 66). Bhishma, on the authority of Markandeya, declared the origin and glory of Krshna, his deeds and creations, to Duryodhana (#) (VI, 67). Bhishma cited a hymn to Narayana, uttered by Brahmán himself, and communicated in days of old by B.-r. and G. on earth. Brahmán, who quoted Narada, etc. ( $\rho$ ), hymned Narayana as the god of D., S., etc. ( $\sigma$ ) (VI, 68).—§ 582: FIFTH DAY: After the night had passed away, Bhishma proceeded in a Makara array, the Pandaras in a Cyona array, in whose beak, etc., was Bhimasona, etc. (a). (1) Bhimasona, penetrating the Makara array through its mouth, attacked Bhishma; the Pandavas were confounded. (2) Then Arjuna attacked Bhishma. (3) Duryodhana addressed Drona, who attacked Satyaki (the grandson of Cini). (4) Bhimasona attacked Drona in order to protect Satyaki. (5) Drong, etc. (β), attacked Bhimasong. (6) Abhimanyu and the Draupadeyas attacked the Kurus; Cikhandin attacked Bhishma and Drona; Bhishma avoided him. (7) Urged by Duryodhana, Drona protected Bhishma; Cikhandin avoided Drona. (8) Duryodhana protected Bhishma, who was attacked by the Pandavas with Arjuna at their head (VI, 69). An awful carnage ensued. (9) Duryodhana and the Kalingas placed Bhishma at their head and attacked the Pandavas; the Pandavas, supporting Bhima, attacked Bhishma (VI, 70). Arjuna (b) attacked Bhishma with the Gundiva (c); the Kurus were afraid and seemed to melt away. (10) Then, with steeds of the Kāmboja breed, the Kālinga king, etc. (7), surrounded Cakuni. Bhīshma, etc., fought with Arjuna, etc. (δ); Drupada, etc. (c), fought with Drona; Krpa and Krtavarman attacked Dhrshtadyumna (VI, 71). Arjuna encountered Drona, etc. (ζ). Sātyaki, etc. (η), attacked Calva and the Kaikeyas. Dhrshtaketu and Ghatotkaca attacked the chariot-division of the Dhartarashtras. Bhishma checked Bhimasena. Satyaki (Yuyudhana) attacked Bhishma, but had his charioteer slain. Bhīshma slow the Pāndava forces; but the Pāncālas and the Somakas again attacked Bhishma. (11) Dhrshtadyumna, etc., attacked Bhishma; Bhishma, Drong, etc., attacked the Pandavas (VI, 72).

Abhimanyu attacked Citrasena, etc. (0). (12) Duryodhana attacked Abhimanyu, and so did Lakshmana (grandson of Dhrtarāshtra), who had his steeds and charioteer slain, and was carried away by Krpa on his chariot. The Srajayas fought with the Kurus with their fists; Bhishma slow the troops of the Pandavas with his celestial weapons (VI, 73). (13) Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna) slew innumerable fees with his arrows: Duryodhana despatched 10,000 chariots against him, but he destroyed them all with his celestial weapons. Satyaki & Bhuricravas (d); Satyaki's combatants fled and abandened him; ten sons of Yuyudhana & Bhuricravas (son of Bahlika's son Somadalia) towards the afternoon; Bhūricravas slew them; Sātyaki & Bhūricravas, each of them slew the other's chariot-steeds; Bhimasena took Satyaki up on his own chariot, and Duryodhana Bhuricravas on his. (14) The Pandavae & Bhishma; Duryodhana urged 25,000 to slay Arjuna, who, however, slew them all. The Mateyas and Kekayas surrounded Arjuna and Abhimanyu. At sunset Bhishms caused the troops to be withdrawn, and so did the Pandavas and the Srnjayas (VI, 74). - § 583; THE SIXTH DAY: After the night had passed away, the Kurus and the Pandavas once more set Yudhishthira caused Dhrshtadyumna to out for battle. dispose the troops in the Makara array: Drupada and Arjuna - head; Sahadeva and Nakula - two eyes; Bhimasona = boak; Abhimanyu, etc. (a) = neck; Virata and Dhrshtadyumna = back; five Kokaya brothers = left wing; Dhrshtaketu and Cekitana = right wing; Kuntibhoja and Catānīka = two feet; Cikhandin, etc. (β) = tail. Bhīzhma disposed his army in the form of a huge crane: Drona = beak; Açvatthaman and Krpa = two eyes; Krtavarman, etc. (γ) = head; Çūrasena and Duryodhana = neck; the Prāgjyotisha king, etc. (ĉ) = breast; the Prasthala king Sugarman = left wing; the Tusharas, etc. (e) = right wing; Crutayus, etc.  $(\zeta)$  = rear. The Pandava army was protected by Bhimasona, etc. (1); the Kaurara army by Bhishma, etc. (0). (1) Bhimasona & Drona, who had his charioteer slain and then himself restrained his steeds. (2) Slaughtered by Drong and Bhīshma, the Srūjayas and Kekayas took to flight; and so did the Kauravas, mangled by Bhima and Arjuna (VI, 75). Dhrtarushtra recounted the excellency of the Kaurava army, protected by Drona, etc. (1). Neither men nor Rehie of old ever behold such an army. That it should yet be slaughtered, he thought was due only to fate (or to the Creator); Vidura had spoken well, but the wicked Duryodhana would not accept (VI, 76). (3) Bhimasona & the younger brothers of Duryodhana: Dunçanana, etc. (x); Bhima left his chariot and took up his mace. (4) Dhrshtadyumna (forsaking Drona) proceeded towards Cakuni; seeing Bhīma's empty chariot, he became afflicted, but was comforted by the words of Viçoka; he took Bhina, who was surrounded by foes on all sides, into his chariot. (5) The Dhartarashtras (Duryodhana, etc.) & Dhrshtadyumna (who applied the weapon Pramohana). (6) Drona & Drupada (who left the battle); the Somakas were struck with four. (7) Drong, with the weapon Prajūā, neutrelized the Pramohana weapon in order to rescue Dhrtarashtra's sons. (8) Yudhishthira sent the Kaikeyas, etc. ( $\lambda$ ), headed by Abhimanyu, arrayed in a Sucimukha, to help Bhima and Dhrshtadyumna; Dhrtarāshtra's troops were quite helpless, like a lady in the streets. (9) Dhrshtadyumna, causing Bhima to be taken into the chariot of the Kokaya king, attacked Drona, who slew his charioteer and steeds; Dhrshtadyumna ascended the chariot of Abhimanyu; Drona broke the Pandara army (VI, 77). (10) Duryodhana & Bhima (who ascended his own chariot); Bhīma & Citrasena, etc. (11) Yudhishthira sent 12 chariot-warriors (Abhimanyu, etc.) to follow Bhimasena from behind; seeing them, the Dhartarashtras abandoned Bhima. In the afternoon Duryodhana attacked Abhimanyu and Bhimasena: Abhimanyu & Vikarna, who had his steeds slain and mounted on the chariot of Citrasena; Abhimanyu & Durjaya and Vikarna; Duhçusana & the five Kekaya brothers; Draupadeyuh & Duryodhana (VI, 78). Duryodhana (b) & Bhimasena (who said that he, by slaying D., would dispel the sorrows of Kunti, etc.) (µ). (12) The Sindhu king came to the rescue of Duryodhana; Krpa caused Duryodhana to mount his own chariot; Jayadratha & Bhimasena. (13) Dhrshtaketu, etc. (v), & the sons of Dhrtarashtra; Abhimanyu & Vikarna (who had his charioteer and steeds slain, and was himself pierced); Durmukha & Crutakarman (who had his steeds slain); Sutasoma took Crutakarman into his own chariot; Çrutakirti & Jayatsona (Dhartarashtra); Çatunika & Jayatsona; Dushkarna & Çatanika, who slew Dushkarna; Çatanika was surrounded by foes. (14) The five Kekaya brothers & the sons of Dhriardehira: Durmukha, etc. (f). About sunset Bhishma broke the ranks of the Pandaras: and so did Yudhichthire. having smelt the heads of Dhrshtadyumns and Bhimasens (VI, 79). Duryodhana sought Bhishma in the night and gave expression to his grief at the success of the Pandavas; Bhishma promised to do his best, at which Duryodhana was delighted (VI, 80) .- § 584: THE SEVENTH DAY: Bhishma said to Duryodhana that he himself, etc. (a), were all prepared to battle for his sake; that the Pandavas could not be vanquished by the very gods including Indra, having Krehna for their ally, etc.; but that he would either vanquish them or be vanquished by them. He gave Duryodhana a herb of great efficacy for healing his wounds. At dawn Bhishma disposed his troops in a Mandala array (description), protected by Bhīshma, who was again protected by Citrasena, etc.; Duryodhana looked like Çakra himself. Then the Dhartarashtras began to proceed, facing the west. Yudhishthira disposed his troops in a Vajra array. (1) Drona & the Mateya king; Agratthaman & Cikhandin; Duryodhana & Dhrshtadyumna; Nakula and Sahadeva & the Madra king; Vinda and Anuvinda & Iravat; many kings & Arjuna; Bhīmasena & Kṛtavarman Hūrdikya; Abhimanyu & Citrasena, etc. (β) (sons of Dhrtarūshtra); Ghatotkaca & the Prūgiyotisha king; Alambusha & Sūtyaki; Bhūricravas & Dhrehtaketu; Yudhishthira & king Crutayus; Cokitana & Krpa. Others proceeded against Bhima, and thousands against Arjuna, among others the Trigarta king with his brothers. D., D.-r., O., and U. wondered, beholding the two Krehnas (i.e. Krehna and Arjuna). Arjuna invoked the Aindra weapon; the focs fled, but were rescued by Bhishma (VI, 81). (2) After Sucarman had ceased fighting, and the Kuru army had been routed by Arjuna, and Bhishma had proceeded against the chariot of Arjuna, Duryodhana exhorted the kings and Suçarman to protect Bhīshma, who resembled the planet Cukra (Venus) and was surrounded by the Trigarias. Drona & the Mateya king (Virala), who mounted the chariot of Cankha (his son), who was slain by Drona; Virața fled. Cikhandin & Acvatthaman; Cikhandin descended, fought first with a sword, then mounted Satyaki's chariot. Satyaki & Alambusha; Satyaki employed the Aindra weapon which he had obtained from Arjuna, and destroyed the creations of Alambusha's illusive power; Alambusha fled. Dhrshfadyumna & Duryodhana, who was forced to descend, mounted Cakuni's chariot. Krtavarman & Bhimasena; Krtavarman went to the chariot of Vrshaka in the very sight of Calya and Duryodhana (VI, 82). Dhrtarāshtra spoke to Sanjaya about the cheerfulness of the Pandavas and the cheerlessness of the Kurus, which he thought was destiny. (3) In the forenoon: The two Avants princes & Iravat (the daughter's son of the king of the Nagas); Anuvinda mounted the chariot of Vinda; the horses ran away with the chariot. Ghatotkaca & Bhagadatts; D., G., and R. came there; except Ghafotkaca, the other Pandava warriors fled, but rallied. (4) The Pragjyotisha king & Ghatotkaca, who fled. The ruler of the Madras (Calya) & the twins; Nakula must mount the chariot of Sahadeva; Çalya was borne away by his charioteer (VI, 83). When the sun reached the meridian: Yudhishthira & Crutayus; D., G., and Ra. trembled; R. and D. prayed for the peace of the world; Crutayus fled, and the troops of Duryodhana turned away. Cekitana & Krpa; Cekitana was forced to descend, and took up a mace, and then a sword; Karakarsha took Cekilana into his chariot, and Cakuni took Krps into his. Dhrehtaketu & Bhuricravas (the son of Somadatta); Dhrehiaketu mounted the chariot of Catanika.

Citrasona, etc. (7), & Abhimanyu, who did not slay them, remembering Bhima's words. Arjuna caused Krehna to direct the chariot against Bhishma; Arjuna & Suçarman (VI, 84); many were slain by Arjuna. (5) The Trigerta king and thirtytwo others attacked Arjuna, who slew sixty (so C.) chariotwarriors, and sped to kill Bhishms. (6) The Trigarts king attacked Arjuna; Cikhandin, etc., came to his rescue; Arjuna shot at them with the Gandiva. (7) Duryodhana, with Joyadratha, etc., came to protect Bhishma against Arjuna, who, avoiding them, attacked Bhishma, as did also Yudhishihira, etc. (8), avoiding the Madra king. Krpa, etc. (8), shot at the Pandavas. Cikhandin fled, but, rebuked by Yudhishthira, who reminded him of his oath, he again attacked Bhichma. Calya & Cikhandin, who employed the Varuna weapon. Bhimasona (mace in hand) & Jayadratha; Citrasona & Bhimasena (VI, 85); Citrasena mounted on Vikarna's chariot. Bhishma & Yudhishihira (accompanied by the twins), who mounted Nakula's chariot. Yudhishthira urged the kings to slay Bhishma. Cikhandin & Bhishma, who disregarded him, remembering that he had formerly been a wife; the Srijayas & Bhishma. (8) Dhrshfadyumna and Satyaki alaughter the (9) Vinda and Anuvinda attacked Dhrehta-Kuru army. dyumna, who mounted Satyaki's chariot. (10) Yudhishthira attacked Vinda and Anuvinda, protected by Duryodhana. (11) Arjuna fought against many foes. (12) Drona began to consume the Pañcalas like fire a heap of cotton. (13) Duryodhana and his brothers surrounded Bhishma and fought against the Pandavas. At sunset Ra., Pc., etc., were seen all around. At sunset Arjuna (having vanquished Suçarman, etc.), Yudhishthira with his brothers, Bhīmasens (having vanquished Duryodhans, etc.), Duryodhans (protecting Bhishma), Drona, etc., proceeded to their tents (VI, 86).- § 585: THE EIGHTH DAY: Having passed the night, the Kauravas and Pandavas once more proceeded to battle. Duryodhana, etc. (a), formed the array, having Bhishma with the Malavas, etc., in the van  $(\beta)$ ; next to him was Dropa with the Pulindas, etc. ( $\gamma$ ); next to Dropa was Bhagadatta with the Magadhas, etc. ( $\delta$ ); behind him was the Koçala king Brhadbala with the Melukas, etc. (e); next to him the Praethala king Traigarta, etc. (5); next to the Trigarla king was Acvatthaman; next to him Duryodhana with the whole army and his brothers; behind him Krpa. Urged by Yudhishthira, Dhrshtadyumna formed a Crigataka array: Bhimasona and Satyaki, etc. - the horns; next to them Arjuna and Krshna; Yudhishthira, etc.  $(\eta)$  = the centre; Abhimanyu, etc.  $(\theta)$  = rear. Description of the battle. Bhlehma & Dhrehtadyumna (VI, 87). Yudhishthira & Bhishma. Bhimasena & Bhishma, who was protected by Duryodhana and his brothers; the steeds ran away with Bhishma; Bhimasena slew eight sons of Dhrtarashtra: Sunabha. etc. (1). Then the other sons of Dhytarashtra all fled away. Duryodhana urged his brothers to kill Bhima. They remembered the words of Vidura. Duryodhana blamed Bhishma, who reminded him of the words of Drong, etc. (a) (VI, 88). Dhrtarashira complained to Sanjaya that his sons, though assisted by Drops, etc. ( $\lambda$ ), were still slain; "What can be the reason save fate?" He regretted that the wicked Duryodhana had not obeyed Bhishma, etc. (µ). Sanjaya said that Dhytarashtra ought to have restrained his sons from gambling. At noon the whole Pageses army, at the command of Yudhichfhira - Dhrehfadyumna, etc. (v)rushed against Bhishma alone. Arjuna, etc. (5), rushed against all the kings under the command of Duryodkana.

A third body was formed of Abhimanyu, etc. (a). Drona slew the Somakas and Srnjayas; Bhimasena, principally the elephant division of the Kurus; Nakula and Sahadeva, the cavalry; the Pandavas were destroyed by Bhishma, etc.  $(\pi)$ (VI, 89). Cakuni and Kriavarman Hardikya attacked the Pandavas. With horses of the Kamboja, etc.  $(\rho)$ , breed Arjuna's son Iravat (b) attacked the Kauravas, and with his steeds brought about great confusion in their cavalry. Cakuni + his six brothers Gaja, etc. (a), & Iravat, who slew them except Vrshabha. Duryodhana urged Rshyucrnga's son the Ra. (c) [Alambusha] (who hated Bhimasena because he had killed Baka) to slay Iravat; both of them had recourse to magic; Nagas came to the rescue of Irdvat, but were consumed by a phantom in the form of Garuda; then Irarat became confounded and was slain by [Alambusha]. Arjuna, etc. (7), slew many. Both armies fought as if they were all possessed by Rakshasas and demons (rakshobhūtair; B. rakshobhūtā) (VI, 90). Ghatotkaca, etc., & Duryodhana + the Vahga king with 10,000 elephants; Duryodhana slew four Rā.: Vegavat, etc. (v); Ghatotkaca threatened Duryodhana with revenge for the exile of the Pandavas, etc. (\$\phi\$) (VI, \$\mathbf{91}\$); the Vanga king, mounted on his elephant, placed himself between Ghatotkaca and Duryodhana; Ghatotkaca slew the elephant. Bhīshma sent Drona, etc.  $(\chi)$ , to the rescue of Duryodhana (VI, 92). Bhima, urged by Yudhishthira, came to the rescue of Ghatotkaca, with Satyadhrti, etc. (4). The Kurus left Ghatotkaoa and fled (VI, 93). Duryodhana & Bhimasena, who was wounded; Abhimanyu, etc., & Duryodhana; urged by Drona, Somadatta, etc. (w), attacked the Pandavas; Drona & Bhima; Nila & Açvatthaman; Açvatthaman & Ghatotkaca + many other Ra.; Drona & Ra.; Ghatotkaca confounded Acvatthaman by magic; the Kurus and Drong. etc. (aa), seemed to fly, etc.; then, towards sunset, the Kuru troops fled, notwithstanding the words of Sanjaya and Bhishma (VI, 94). Duryodhana complained to Bhishma that he had not himself been able to slay Ghatotkaca. Bhishma said Duryodhana should always battle with Yudhishthira, etc.  $(\beta\beta)$ , while Bhishma, etc.  $(\gamma\gamma)$ , would battle against Ghafotkaca; or Bhagadatta should fight against Ghatotkaca. Urged by Bhima, Bhagadatta, on his elephant Supratika, set out against the foes. Bhagadatta & Bhimasona (b), etc. (δδ). Bhagadatta & the five Kekaya princes, etc. (••); wounded by the Pragjyotisha king, the elephant of the Daçarna king fled; Ghatotkasa & Bhagadatta; D., G., and Munis wondered; Bhagadatta wounded Viçoka (Bhīma's charioteer); Bhima descended, taking up his mace; Arjuna came; Duryodhana sent a division; Bhagadatta attacked Yudhishthira; Bhagadatta & the Pañcalas, etc. (55); Bhimasens told Krshna and Arjuna about the slaughter of Iravat (VI, 95). Arjuna complained to Krshna about Iravut's death, the killing of kinsmen, etc., quoting Vidura, etc. In the afternoon: Drona + Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons & Bhīmasena; Bhīshma, etc. (ηη), & Arjuna; Krtavarman + Bāhlīka & Sātyaki; Ambastha & Abhimanyu; Bhīma felled Vyūdhoraska, etc.  $(\theta\theta)$ . Then the other sons of Dhrtardshtra fled. Ambastha got upon the chariot of Krtavarman. Dhrehtadyumna, etc., battled with the Kurus. When dark set in, both parties withdrew their armies (VI, 96). Duryodhana consulted Cakeni, etc. (11), as to why Drong, etc. (11), did not resist the Parthas. Karna asked Duryodhana to see Bhishma and solicit him to withdraw from the battle in order to permit Karna to fight the foe. Duryodhana set out for Bhishma's tent (description), and asked Bhuhma to retire if he was not competent to slav the Pandaras, etc. (λλ) (VI. 97). Bhishme spoke to Duryodhana about the invincibility of the Pandaras. mentioning the Khandava forest, etc. (uu), and Krshna (citing Narada and other great R.); he promised to display all his valour on the next day; only Cikhandin-who was really Cikhandini—he would not slay. Duryodhana told Duhçasana to let all their twenty-two divisions protect Bhishma against Cikhandin, especially Cakuni, etc. (vv). Thus they proceeded to battle. "Yudhamanyu protected Arjuna's left wheel, Uttamanjas his right wheel, and Arjuna protected Cikhandin." Arjuna told Dhrehladyumna to place Cikhandin before Bhishma; he would himself be his protector (VI, 98) .- § 586: THE NINTH DAY: Bhishma disposed his troops in a Sarvatobhadra array: Krpa, etc. (a), in the van; Drona, etc. (b), on the right wing; Accepthaman, etc.  $(\gamma) = \text{left wing}$ ; Duryodhana, etc. (8), in the midst; Alambusha and Crutayus in the rear. Yudhishthira, etc. (a), stood in the van; then there were Dhrshfadyumna, etc. (5). The Kuru troops were headed by Bhishma, the Pandava troops by Bhimasena (VI, 99). Description of the heroism of Abhimanyu, confounding Krpa, etc. (η). Duryodhana despatched Alambusha to slav Abhimanyu, while they, headed by Bhishma and Drona, would slay Arjuna. Alambusha & Abhimanyu; Alambusha slaughtered the Pandava host; the Draupadoyas (especially Prativindhya) & Alambusha (VI, 100). Dhrtarashtra asked Sanjaya what was done by Alambusha, etc. (0). Alambusha & Abhimanyu, who defeated him. Bhīshma & Abhimanyu, who slaughtered the Kaurava army. Arjuna (surrounded by the Pandavas) & Bhishma (protected by Dhrtarashtra's sons); Krpa & Arjuna; Sātyaki & Erpa; Sātyaki & Açvatthāman; Drona & Sātyaki; Arjuna & Drona (VI, 101); Duryodhana despatched Suçarman to take up the wing of Drona; the Trigarta king (and his son) & Arjuna; D. and Da. were highly gratified; Arjuna employed the Vayavya weapon, Drona the Caila weapon; the Trigarta division turned away; Duryodhana, etc. (1), surrounded Ariuna; Bhagadatta, etc. (x), surrounded Bhima; Bhuricravas, etc. ( $\lambda$ ), & the twins; Bhishma (+ the sons of Dhrtarashtra) & Yudhishthira; Bhimasena, with his mace, slaughtered the elephants. Duryodhana's troops fled (VI, 102). Bhishma & the Somakas; Dhrshtadyumna, etc. (µ), & Bhishma; the Draupadoyas, etc. (v), & Bhīshma; the Kuru army protected Bhishma, who slaughtered the Pandava army; the combatants censured Duryodhana, who urged Bhishma, etc. (§), to fight (VI, 103). Arjuna slew all the followers of Suçarman; Duryodhana (+ Bhishma) & Arjuna. At noon: Satyaki & Krtavarman; Drupada & Drona; Bhimasena & Bahlika; Abhimanyu & Citrasena, who mounted the chariot of Durmukha; Drona & Drupada, who retreated; Bahlika mounted the chariot of Lakshmana; Satyaki & Bhishma; the Pandavas attacked Bhishma in order to rescue Salyaki; battle between them and the Kurus (VI, 104). At the request of Duryodhana, Duhçasana protected Bhishma. Çakuni checked Nakula, etc. (o). Duryodhana despatched 10,000 horsemen, who were checked by Yudhishthira, etc. (π). Duryodhana urged Calya against Yudhishthira; Çalya & Yudhishthira, etc. (p); Bhima came to the rescue of Yudhishthira. When the sun was sinking, there commenced a fierce and terrible battle (VI, 105). Bhishma & Bhima, etc.  $(\sigma)$ . Drona & Satyaki (+ Bhimacona). Bhishma & the Sauviras, etc. (7); Bhishma & 14,000 Cedis, etc. (v), who were slain. Krehna urged Arjuna to slay Bhishma (mentioning his words by Virata). Arjuna & Bhishma. Krehna left his chariot, and rushed at Bhishma, whip in hand, but was brought back by Arjuna (VI, 106). When the sun set, both parties withdrew their forces. Pāṇḍavas, etc.  $(\phi)$ , sat down for a consultation about Bhishma; Krehna said that Arjuna, etc.  $(\chi)$ , were invincible, mentioning Arjuna's words at Upaplarya (ψ). Yudhishthira proposed to go to Bhishma himself and ask him the means of his death. Krshna approved of the proposal, and they went to the tent of Bhishma, who advised Arjuna to fight with him, placing Cikhandin before himself. Arjuna grieved at the prospect of striking Bhishma, but was reminded by Krshna of his vow to slay Bhishma (the words of Brhaspati to Indra in days of old also being quoted). The Pandavas and Krshna went away with rejoicing hearts (VI, 107) .- § 587: THE TENTH DAY: Towards sunrise the Pandava army went out for battle, placing Cikhandin in their van; Bhimasena and Arjuna became the protectors of his wheels; in his rear were the Draupadoyas and Abhimanyu, protected by Sūtyaki and Cokitāna; behind them was Dhrshladyumna, protected by the Pañcalas; next to him was Yudhishthira with the twins; next behind him Virata; next to him Drupada; the five Kekaya brothers and Dhrshtaketu protected the rear. At their head the Kurus had Bhishma (b), protected by Dhrtardshtra's sons; next behind them Drona and Acratthaman; next behind was Bhagadatta with his elephant division; behind him Krpa and Krtavarman; behind them the Kümboja king Sudakshina, etc. (a). The Parthas with Arjuna at their head, placing Cikhandin in the van, proceeded against Bhīshma. Bhīma, etc. (β), slew many. Bhīshma & Pāṇḍavas, etc. (7); Bhishma & Çikhaṇḍin (who mentioned Bhishma & Rama Jamadagnya); Arjuna urged Cikhandin to slay Bhīshma, while Arjuna would check Drona, etc. (8) (VI, 108). Bhishma slew the Pañcalas and the Pandara army. Arjuna slew the Kuru army. Duryodhana complained of Arjuna before Bhishma, and of Sātyaki, etc. (e). Bhishma said he would "to-day" either be slain or slay the Pandavas, and he slew hundreds of thousands (VI, 109). Urged by Arjuna, Cikhandin, and so also Dhrshtadyumna, otc. (ζ), attacked Bhishma; Citrasona & Cekitana; Krtavarman & Dhrshtadyumna; Somadatta's son & Rhīmasena; Vikarņa & Nakula; Krpa & Sahadeva; Durmukha & Ghatotkaca; Duryodhana & Satyaki; tho Kamboja king Sudakshina & Abhimanyu; Açvatthaman & Virața + Drupada; Drona & Yudhishthira; Duhçasana & Arjuna + Çikhandin; otc.; Dhrehtadyumna (exciting the troops for aiding Arjuna) & Bhishma; Arjuna could not advance further than to the chariot of Duhçāsana, who also shot at Krshna; Duhçasana for a moment sought refuge by Bhishma; then he again attacked Arjuna (VI. 110): Alambusha & Sātyaki; Bhagadatta & Sātyaki; Duryodhana & Satyaki; the Kamboja king & Abhimanyu; Cikhandin & Bhishma; Virāta + Drupada & Bhishma; Aqvatthāman & Virata + Drupada; Krpa & Sahadova; Vikarna & Nakula; Durmukha & Ghatotkaca; Krtavarman & Dhrehtadyumna; Bhūricravas & Bhīmasena; Drona & Yudhishthira; the Prabhadrakas began to tremble; Citrasena & Cekitāna; Arjuna compelled Duhçasana to retire, and then crushed the Kuru troops; Dungasana again resisted him (VI, 111). Drong became cheerless upon beholding unfavourable omens  $(\eta)$ ; mentioning Cikhandin and Yudhishthira, etc.  $(\theta)$ , he urged Acratthaman to attack Cikhandin and Bhimasena (VI, 112). Bhagadatta, etc. (1) (ten warriors urged by Drona) & Bhimasena, who was also attacked by Duryodhana; Jayadratha mounted the chariot of Citrasena; Vicoka was wounded by Calya; Arjuna came, placing Cikhandin before himself, and approached Bhima. Then Duryodhana urged the Trigarta king (who ruled Praethala) Suçarman to slay Arjuna and Bhimasena; Sucarman & Arjuna + Bhimasena (VI, 113); Arjuna & Çalya, etc. (x); Jayadratha also attacked Bhīma; so did also Calya, who also shot at Krehna; Drons + the Magadha king Jayatsona (commanded by Duryodhana) & Arjuna + Bhimasena; Jayatsena was carried away by his steeds. Then Bhishma, etc. (A), & Bhimasena + Arjuna; Dhrshladyumna & Bhīshma; Çikhandin & Bhīshma; Yudhishihira, etc. (µ), & Bhishma. A terrible battle ensued, mainly turning upon whether Bhishma should be victorious or vanquished (VI, 114). At Bhishma's own request: Yudhishthira + Arjuna, etc. (v), & Bhīshma, who gave up all desire of protecting his own life. Urged by Duryodhana, Drona, etc. (F) (placing Bhīshma in their van), & the Parthas (headed by Cikhandin), especially Arjuna, etc. (o); the grandson of Cini (Sātyaki) & Açvatthāman; Dhṛshţaketu & Paurava; Yudhāmanyu (B. Abhimanyu) & Duryodhana; Virāţa & Jayadratha (Vrddhakshattrasya dayadam; I do not understand the doubt of PCR.); Yudhishthira & Calya; Bhīmasena & the elephant division; Dhrehtadyumna & Drona; Brhadbala (c) & Abhimanyu (d); the sons of Dhrtarashtra, etc., & Cikhandin + Arjuna (V1, 115); Abhimanyu & Duryodhana; Açvatthaman & Sālyaki; Paurava & Dhrehtakelu; Jayatnena (Dhūrtarāshtra) carried Paurava away on his chariot, and Sahadeva carried away Dhrshfaketu; Citrasena & Suçarman; Abhimanyu & Brhadbala (the Koçala king); Bhimasona slaughtered the elephants; Yudhishthira & Çulya; Jayadrathu & Virata; Drona & Dhrshtadyumna; Arjuna & Bhishma; Bhagadatta & Arjuna, who urged Cikhandin to slav Bhishma; Bhogadatta (leaving Arjuna) & Drupada; Arjuna (placing Cikhandin ahead) & Bhishma; the Kurus attacked Arjuna; Cikhandin attacked Bhishma; 14,000 Cedis, etc. (π), were slain by Bhishma, and so the Somakas; no chariot-warrior ventured to approach Bhīshma except Arjuna (with Krshna) and Çikhandin (VI, 116). Bhishma did not defend himself against Cikhandin, whom Arjuna urged to quickly slay Bhīshma, who with his arrows only checked Arjuna and slew the Pandara warriors. Duhçasana & Arjuna + all the Parthas; Duhçasana was vanquished by Arjuna; the Videhas, etc. (p) (urged by Duryodhana) & Arjuna, who consumed them all by means of celestial weapons; Arjuna & Duḥçāsana, etc. (σ), who fled (in the forenoon); Bhīshma (with a celestial weapon) & Arjuna; Cikhandin & Bhishma, who withdrew the celestial weapon (VI, 117). Calya, etc. (τ), slaughtered the Pandava warriors; Arjuna felled a great many Kurus. Dhrtarashtra's sons & the Pandavas; the Somakas and Srnjayas (urged by Dhrshtadyumna) & Bhīshma (who relied on the instruction he had got from Rāma); Bhīshma slew 10,000 elephants, etc., and seven Matsyas and Pañcalas, and Çatanika (the brother of Verața), etc. Krshna urged Arjuna to slay Bhishma. The Pañcala king and Dhrehtaketu, etc. (v), were afflicted by Bhishma and rescued by Arjuna; Cikhandin, protected by Arjuna, rushed against Bhishma; Arjuna slew all Bhishma's followers, and then rushed at himself; Sātyaki, etc. (φ), attacked Bhīshma, who slew seven warriors of Physhtadyumna's division (VI, 118). Continuation: The extraordinary heroism of Bhishma: he (disregarding the Pañcala king and Dhrshtaketu) & Satyaki. etc. (x); Arjuna (with Cikhandin ahead) & Bhīshma; Drona, etc. (4) (employing celestial weapons), & Arjuna; Satyaki. etc. (w), & the Kauravas, in order to rescue Arjuna; Arjuna (with Cikhandin) & Bhishma, who (remembering the boon granted by his father) now wished his death, which was approved of by R. and V. (heard only by Bhishms and Sanjaya), etc.; Bhishma said to Dungasana that Arjuna was invincible, and that he himself could not be vanquished by D., Da., and Ra. Yudhishthira urged his troops against Bhishma; Dhrtarashtra's sons surrounded Bhishma, but fled for Arjuna; the Sauviras, etc. (aa), abandoned Bhishma. A little before sunset Bhishma fell down from his chariot with his head to the east; there were heard celestial voices, etc.; as the sun was in the southern solstice. Bhishma postponed his death; Ganad sent to him the great R, in form of swans inhabiting the Manasa lake. The Kurus, headed by Krpa and Duryodhana, sighed and wept; the Pandavas and Spinayas, etc.  $(\beta\beta)$ , uttered loud shouts. R. and P. applauded Bhishma, who had recourse to that Yoga which is taught in the great Upanishads (VI, 119). Dhrtarāshtra, mentioning Bhīshma's bruhmacarya for the sake of his father, and that he had not been slain by Rama Jamadagnya, grieved that he had been slain by Cikhandin. Sanjava related that Bhishma lay on his bed of arrows, without, however, touching the earth. Both the Kurus (Karna, Duryodhana, etc.) and the Pandaras were despondent; the welkin was enveloped with a gloom, etc.; R., Si., and Ca. mentioned his brahmacarya for his father's The Pandavas blew their conches, and Bhimasena sported in great glee. Duhçasana informed Drona, who fell down from his chariot, and then ordered the Kurus to desist from battle; and so did the Pandaras. Then the kings of both armies all repaired to Bhishma. Bhishma's head hanging down, he asked a pillow; he refused the soft pillows offered him, and asked Arjuna to give him a suitable pillow; Arjuna supported his head with three arrows shot from the Gandira and inspired with mantras; Bhishma was highly gratified. He caused Duryodhana to dismiss the physicians; he asked that a ditch should be dug around him, until the sun should proceed towards the direction occupied by Vaicravana (i.e. the north), and told them to cease fighting. Stationing guards all around for his protection, the heroes repaired for rest in the evening. Krehna congratulated Yudhishthira, "that canst slay with thy eyes alone"; Yudhishthira ascribed the victory to Krohna (VI, 120) .- § 588: THE ELEVENTH DAY: After the night had passed away, maidens came to Bhishma and showered flowers upon him. The Pandavas and Kauravas assembled together like brothers around his body. Bhishma asked for water; he refused the excellent viands and water offered him, and asked Arjuna to give him water; Arjuna mounted his chariot, and from the Gandiva shot an arrow inspired with mantras and identified with the Parjanya weapon, piercing therewith the earth, and there arose a jet of pure and cold water; Bhishma praised Arjuna: "even Narada spoke of thee as an ancient Rshi"; he mentioned his alliance with Krehna, and regretted that Duryodhana had not listened to the words of Bhishma, etc. (a). He said to Duryodhana that the weapons appertaining to Agni, etc. ( $\beta$ ), were known only to Arjuna and Krehna, and told him to make peace, as long as Yudhishthira, etc. (7), did not consume his troops; "let Yudhishthira go to Indrapraetha." But Duryodhana would not accept his counsels (VI, 121). All the kings retired. Karna visited Bhishma in private. Bhishma told Karna that he was not the son of Radha, but of Kunti; that he knew from Narada and Vyasa; "sinfully didst thou come into the world; therefore it is that thy heart has been such, and also because thou didst associate with the low"; he mentioned that, proceeding to the city of Kaçi, Karna alone, with his bow, had crushed the kings in battle in order to procure a bride for the Kuru king; Jardsandha could not become a match to Karns in fight. He adjured Karns to unite with his uterine brothers. Karna mentioned that Kunii had abandoned him, and his obligations to Duryodhana, etc. (8); he would fight Arjuna and the Pandavas though they were protected by Kṛshṇa. Bhīshma gave permission to Karna to fight, making heaven his goal, and then dismissed him (VI, 122).

Bhishmotpatti(h) ("origin of Bhishma"). § 163 (of. Cantanup.): Ganga agreed to become the wife of Cantanu on the condition that she would leave him the moment he interfered with her or spoke an unkind word to her. They had eight children; but seven of them were, as soon as they were born, thrown into the water by her. The eighth was rescued by Cantanu's interfering. But then Ganga, telling him who she was, and that his sons were the eight Vasu's who had been cursed by Vasishtha, left him (I, 98). (For continuation v. Apavop.)

[Bhrgu-Bharadvāja-saṃvāda(h)] ("the conversation between Bhrgu and Bharadvāja"). § 660b (Mokshadh.): The Primeval Being called Mānasa (description) > Mahat > Consciousness > Space > Water > Fire and Wind > Earth. The self-born Mānasa created a lotus pregnant with Energy > Brahmán>all things, Brahmán = Ananta: Agni and Soma (= the Sun and the Moon) are his eyes, etc. Bharadvāja asked Bārgu about the extent of the firmament. Bhrgu explained that the firmament or Space is infinite, and is peopled with systems upon systems of self-luminous bodies (devah), etc. Bharadvāja asked why Brahmán is called the first-born and not the Lotus whence he sprang. Bhrgu's answer: The earth is that lotus, created to give rise to that form of Manasa which became Brahman; Sumeru, reaching up to heaven, became its pericarp (XII, 182). Bharadvilja asked how Brahman, residing within Meru, created all things. Bhrgu said that Manasa [in his form of Brahman, PCR.] created by flut of Will, first water, which is the life of all creatures; earth, etc., are transformations of water, and have been produced by the solidification of that element. Bharadvaja enquired after the manner and order of the creation of the several elements; Bhrgu explained that in very ancient times (the Brahmakalpa) Br.-r., assembled together, felt this very doubt, engaged in contemplation for 1,000 celestial years, and then heard a celestial voice saving: "Formerly there was only infinite Space . . . " (XII, 183). Asked by Bharadvaja, Bhrgu explained why only the five primul elements are called Bhūtas. Bharadvāja enquired why all the elements are not seen in the immobile objects. Bhrgu explained how all objects consist of all the five primal elements, but in each the proportions are different; as example he adduced the trees, which he showed to be not inanimate, etc.; through the breath called Prana living creatures are enabled to move; through Vyana they put forth strength for action; Apana moves downward; Samana resides within the heart; through Udana one eructates and is enabled to utter the seven original notes called Shadja, etc. (a) (XII, 184). Asked by Bharadvaja, Bhrgu explained how fire resides within a living body, and how wind moves the body; Prāna (c), Samāna (d), Apāna (e), Udāna (f), Vydna (g) (XII, 185). Bharadvaja's observations on life being worth little if that which is called life be due to the action of fire and wind only (XII, 186). Bhrgu's observations on the indestructibility of living creatures; Bharadvaja's objection; Bhrgu's answer ("it is fire that sustains the breaths Prana, etc.; that heat is called life . . . "). Bharadvaja enquired on the true nature of life; Bhrgu explained that it is antaratman that inspires the body: water -the soul (ātmā) = Brahmán (in all creatures) = kehetrajña and paramátman respectively; etc. There is no destruction of the living agent; it is the body that is dissolved in death (XII, 187). Rhrgu said: Brahmán first created only some brahmans who were Prajapatis; then Truth, etc. (B); then D., Dā., G., Dai., As., M.-U., Y., Rā., N., Pç., and men with their four divisions: brahmans (white), kehattriyas (red), vaiçyas (yellow), and çūdras (black); etc. Bharadvāja was unwilling to admit any original distinction between the four castes; Bhrgu admitted that there is no original distinction between them; all the world at first consisted of only brahmans; how the different castes gradually rose; those are not brahmans that are incapable of understanding that every created thing is the Supreme Brahmán; they take birth as Pc., Ra., Pretas, and Mlecchas (XII, 188). What acts constitute a brahman, a kshattriya; a vaiçya, a çūdra; a çūdra may become a brahman by adopting the characteristics of a brahman, and vice versa; the duties that one should observe to become truly rightcous; the mind should be united with Prans. and Prana be held within Brahmán (XII, 189). Bhrgu discoursed on the characteristics of Truth and Untruth; happiness should always be sought; upon what happiness depends; Bharadvaja doubted that happiness is the highest aim ("Brahman lives alone, observant of the vow of brahmacarya; Cira brought Kāma to extinction "); Bhrgu's discourse in explanation of Bharadvaja's doubt ("the earth is the progenitrix of all creatures; females partake of her nature; the male animal is like Prajapati himself") (XII, 190). Asked by Bharadraja, Bhrgu explained the consequences of gifts, of righteousness, of conduct, of penances, of the study of the Vedas, and of Sacrifices. Asked by Bharadvaja, he then discoursed about the several kinds of duty; then about the four modes of life (laid down in days of old by Brahman for the henefit of the world) and the duties of the several modes (XII, 191); on the duties of the Forest mode of life; on those of the Parivrajakas. Bharadraja enquired about the existence of any region beyond that which we inhabit; Bhrgu indicated the existence in the North (on the other side of Himavat) of a region that is the abode of the righteous: "Here Brahman in days of yore, and all the gods with R., having performed proper penances, became purified and attained to Brahman."-Bharadvaja worshipped Bhrqu with veneration (XII, 192).

Sanjaya describes the seven [great] islands, the moon and the sun, and Rahu. Jambu-parvata (i.e. Jambu-dvīpa, v. Nīl.) extends for 18,600 yojanas. The extent of the salt ocean is twice this; it has many kingdoms, mountains, etc., peopled by Si. and Ca., and is circular in form. Then Cakadvipa (b) (VI, 11). In the North is the ocean of clarified butter; then that of curds; then that of wine; then another of water. The extent of the islands is doubled as they proceed further and further towards the North. In the island in the middle is the great mountain Gaura of red arsenic; in the western the mountain Krshna, the friend (i.e. favourite abode, PCR.) of Narayana, where Keçava guards celestial gems and bestows happiness on creatures. The clump of Kuca-grass in Kuça-dvīpa and the Çalmali tree in Çalmalika are adored. In the Kraunca island also the mountain Maha-Kraunca (a mine of all kinds of gems) is always adored by all four castes of men. There is the huge mountain Gomanta (consisting of all kinds of metals), whereon, with the emancipated (mokshibhih), the puissant Narāyana Hari always resides. In  $Ku_{\zeta}adv_{\zeta}pa$  are six principal mountains (c); the intervening spaces increase in the ratio of one to two as they proceed further and further towards the North; and seven Varshas (ζ), where D. and G., etc., sport, and the inhabitants never die, and there are no robbers or Mlecchas; all the residents are almost white and very delicate. In the Krauñea island are six mountains  $(\eta)$ ; the intervening spaces increase in the ratio of one to two; there are seven countries (deçāḥ)  $(\theta)$ , inhabited by D. and G.; the people are almost white. In the island of Pushkara is the mountain Pushkara, with jewels and gems; there Prajapati always dwells, adored by D. and M.-r.; diverse goms from Jambu-dripa are used there. In all these islands truth, etc., increase in the ratio of one to two, as the islands become more and more remote. The land in all those islands comprises but one country, for that is said to be one country in which one religion is met with. Prajapati always dwells there, protecting those islands. Cooked food comes there of itself. After these regions is seen Samā (c). Then he speaks of Scarbhanu (d; v. Rahu), Candramas (e). Surya(f). "I have now told thee the construction of the universe according to the Castras. Therefore pacify thy son Duryodhana." Blessing upon the reader (VI, 12).

[Bisastainyopākhyāna] ("the episode relating to the

said: The seven R. Kaçyapa, etc. (a), and Arundhati together had one single maidservant, Ganda, who was married to the cudra Pacusakha. While they, in days of old, practised penances, preparing themselves for (upacikshanto) Brahmaloka by yoga meditation (samādhinā), there occurred a severe drought; Cibi's son Caibya had in strener times given away a son of his as the sacrificial present to the rivies; that prince now died of starvation; impelled by hunger, the Rshis cooked his body in a vessel. King Caibya Vrshādarbhi came and offered to give them kine, etc., but they refused it: that acceptance of gifts from a king was poison; they left the spot abandoning that flesh. The king sent his ministers with figs, some of which were filled with gold; but Atri, finding them heavy, refused to take them; and so did all of them  $(\beta)$ , and left the spot. Filled with wrath, Vrshādarbhi, after having observed penances, poured libations into the fire accompanied by mantras; from the fire a hag (krtyā) sprang forth, whom he called Yātudhānī; he ordered her to slay the Rshis, etc., having ascertained their names. While R. roved within the forest, subsisting upon fruits and roots, they saw a well-nourished mendicant [called further below Cunaheakha] with a dog in good condition; Arundhati pointed him out to them, and each of them explained the superior condition of this mendicant with reference to one of the points in which he was better situated than they (7). The wandering mendicant approached them and touched their hand according to custom. One day they beheld a beautiful lake overgrown with lotuses, and desired to gather some lotus-stalks; urged by Vrshādarbhi, Yātudhani, who guarded the lake, would know their names before they took the stalks; Alri knew that she stood there in order to slay them; but they all told their names with their etymological explanations (δ); at each explanation Yatudhani declared that she did not understand it, [in some cases] "in consequence of the inflections which the roots had undergone"; Cunahsakha calls himself Cunahsakha-sakhi, and as Yatudhani wishes to hear the name once more in order to understand it, he struck her head with his triple stick, at which she was consumed to ashes. Having gathered lotus-stalks, they once more plunged into the lake in order to offer oblations of water to the Pitrs. As they came up, the stalks were nowhere to be seen. They took, each of them, oaths to their innocence (e); but the oath of Cunaheakha was "no oath at all,' and he confessed that he had stolen the stalks from desire of testing them; he turned out to be Indra, who had come to test them, and told them the whole matter about Yātudhānī. They then ascended to heaven in the company of Indra himself \* (XIII, 93).

Brahmadatta - Pūjanī - Samvāda(h) ("conversation between Br. and P."). § 647b: XII, 139: As Bhishma had said that from trust great danger arose to kings, Yudhishthira asked: "But how would the king maintain himself if he were not to trust anybody?" Bhishma related: A bird named Pajant lived with king Brahmadatta in his palace at Kampilya; like [the bird] Jivajivaka, it could mimic the cries of all animals (rutajna sarvabhūtānām), etc. At one and the same time P. got an offspring and the king a son. P. used every day to go to the shores of the ocean and bring a couple of fruits, one for her own child and one for the prince. One day the prince, when playing with the offspring of P., killed it, and then came back to his nurse. When P. had returned to the palace, she wept bitterly, and said that nobody should live with a kshattriya or make friends with him; for so long as it suits their purpose, they behave with courtesy; but then they throw off the instrument; they do evil to all, and should never be trusted; even after doing an injury they try to soothe. P. then pierced the eyes of the prince, saying that those who avenge an injury never lose their merit by such conduct. Thinking that the avengor only squares his account, Br. sought to prevail upon P. to remain; "even after a deadly injury, affection and mutual trust arise between two persons residing together (for instance, the cvapaca [candala, PCR.] and the dog); animosity disappears quickly, like water poured upon the leaf of a lotus; it is Time that does every act; who therefore injures whom? Like fire consuming the fuel, Time consumes all creatures; what thou hast done, has been forgiven by me, do thou also forgive me." P. maintained that the injurer ought to leave his old place and never to place his trust upon the injured; just as the fragments of an earthen vessel cannot be reunited; animosity destroys the very sons and grandsons, and thereby the parties lose the next world as well; animosity can never die; it lies hidden like fire in wood, or like the water-fire (toyagnih, i.e. the Aurva-fire) in the ocean; amongst men that have injured one another, therefore, mistrust alone can produce happiness; nor should too much trust be placed upon a person deserving of trust; one should try to inspire others with confidence in one's self, but never repose confidence in others (not even in a wife, son, brother, or friend); the mind of a person who has once injured another becomes naturally filled with mistrust if he sees the injured person worshipping him with gifts and honours. Hostility springs from five causes: woman, land, [harsh] words, natural incompatibility (sapatna, i.e. jāti-vairam, [as] that between the cat and the mouse, Nil.), and injury; if Time be the cause of all acts, why do friends and kinsmen seek to avenge each other? further, why did the gods and the Asuras, in days of yore, smite each other in battle? and what use would there be of medicines? and how could religious merit be acquired by persons performing religious acts (kasmād dharmo'sti kartṛshu)? Men wish for birds either [to kill them] for food or [to keep them in cages | for sport. Misery arises from various sources (decrepitude, loss of wealth, association with something disagreeable, separation from agreeable objects, death [badha], immurement [bandha], women, natural causes [sahajam], [especially the death of] a son; foolish persons say that there is no misery in others' misery; but one that knows the flavour of all [sorts of ] misery (rasajñah sarvaduhkhasya), feels the misery of others as his own; [we have this] decision in [our] own practical scriptures, and [according to them] trust is productive of misery (nicoayah svarthaçastreshu, vicoasac odsukhodayah; ought we not to read oyac odrthao?), and Ucanas did formerly quote two verses (gaths) [to this effect] to Prahlada(b); those who trust [the word], true or false, of a foe, are killed by trusting (graddadhānās) like [a seeker of] honey

by dry grass; having conceived (upagrhya) hostilities [people] soothe [their foe], then they dash upon him like a full jar upon stone; if a king does injury to anyone, he should never trust him again. As Br. objected that by mere mistrust one does not obtain his desires, but is like a dead person, P. maintained that it is necessary not to act without an eye to the consequences (for instance, of sore feet, sore eves, a wicked path, want of rain, injurious food); destiny and exertion are depending upon each other (daivam purushakarac ca sthituv anyonyasamçrayat); but those that are high-minded achieve good feats, while eunuchs only pay court to Destiny; knowledge, courage, cleverness, strength, and patience are one's natural (sahajūni) friends; house, precious metals (kupyam), land (kshetram), wife, and friends are secondary (upahitāni) and may be obtained everywhere; home-keeping persons (arhaenshāvabaddhānām) of little understanding are caten up by a bad wife like the crab by her progeny (maghamām segarā—C. çe°—sva, 89 = 5222, v. Nīl.); one should put a distance between oneself and a bad wife, a bad son, a bad king, a bad friend, a bad alliance (ku-sambandham), and a bad country; she only is a wife who speaks what is agreeable; he is a son who makes his sire happy; he is a friend in whom one can trust; that is one's country where one earns one's living; he is a king of strict rule who does not oppress, etc. (95-96 = 5229-5230); the king is the root of the triple aggregate (trivargasya, i.e. Virtue, Wealth, and Pleasure); while taking from his subjects a sixth share of their wealth, he should protect them all; otherwise he is a thief, and takes upon himself the sins of all his subjects, and ultimately sinks into Hell (nirayam prayati); the king, on the other hand, who gives protection is said by the Prajapati Manu to have seven attributes (gunan): he is a father (by compassion; the man who does not behave rightly towards him takes birth [in the next life] as an animal—tiryag gacchati), a mother (by doing good to his subjects-sambharayati-and by cherishing the poor-dinam apy upapadyats), a preceptor (guru) (by giving instruction in morality and virtue-dharmopadeçena), a protector, fire (by scorching the wicked - anishtan), Vaigravana (i.e. Kubera) (by making gifts of wealth to those that are dear to him-ishfeshu), and Yama (by restraining the sinful—yamayann asatah) (c); that king, whose subjects grow like a large lotus in a lake, obtains every reward [here] and meets with honour in Heaven (Svargaloke mahiyate).—Then P. took leave of Br. and proceeded to the region she chose.

Brāhmaṇa (adj.). § 520 (Mudgala): III, 261, 15458 (lokāḥ).

[Brāhmanagītā] ("the instruction given by the brahman"). § 782b (Anugītāparvan): Kṛshṇa said: A certain brahman's wife asked her husband (who was a complete master of every kind of knowledge and wisdom) to what region she should go, being dependent on him as her husband, who was harsh in his conduct towards her (kīnāçam, i.e. karkaçam niranu-kroçam, Nīl.). The brahman discourses on acts; on the seat of the soul, where Brāhman, Sona, and Agni, etc., dwell, and for whose sake Brahman, etc., in Yoga, worship the indestructible, etc.; the life-breaths prāṇa, etc. (a); in the midst of them is Agni Vaiçvānara, whose seven flames are the nose, the tongue, the eye, the skin, the ear, the mind, and the understanding (boddhavyam), etc. (XIV, 20). In this connection an ancient story is cited, viz. that of the institution of the ten hotrs, i.e. the ear, the skin, the two eyes, the tongue, the nose, the two feet, the two hands, the genital organ, the lower duct, and speech; sound, etc., are the ten libations; the points of the compass, wind, sun, moon, earth. fire, Vishnu, Indra, Prajapati, and Mitra are the ten fires, etc. (XIV, 21); in this connection an aucient story is cited, viz. that of the institution of the seven hotrs, the nose, the eye, the tongue, the skin, the ear, the mind, and the understanding (buddhih), not knowing the qualities of one another; the nose, etc., and the understanding never succeed in apprehending doubt, it is the mind [alone] that apprehends it: the nose, etc., and the mind never succeed in apprehending determination; it is the understanding alone that apprehends it: in this connection this ancient narrative of a discourse between the senses and the mind is cited; as the nose does not smell, etc., without the mind, the mind thought itself to be the eternal and foremost one of all the elements; but the senses said that without them the mind would have no enjoyments at all, etc. (XIV, 22); likewise the ancient story of the institution of the five hotrs: Prana, Apana, Udana, Samana, and Vyana; the wind nursed by Prana > Apana > Vyāna > Udāna > Samāna; these asked Brahmán in days of vore as to which of them was the foremost; Brahmán said that he upon whose extinction all the life-breaths become extinct is the foremost; it turned out (as Brahmán said) that they are all foremost and not foremost, as they possess the attributes of one another (XIV, 23); likewise the ancient story of the discourse between Narada and R. Devamata. Devamata said: Which part of a creature that takes birth comes first into existence, is it Prana or Apana, etc.? Nārada seems to give the following explanation: kāma (desire) is (1-2) samāna and vyāna, which move transversely and alternately [from the man to the woman, and vice versa?] and have sprung from sativa; from kama springs the vital seed [in the man] and the rajas or blood [in the woman]; from the union of these two springs (3) prana, and from the seed being modified by prana springs (4) apana; these two move up and down and represent the two libations in the [mystical] fire; from the sexual intercourse of the loving pair springs harsha (pleasure), which is (5) udana = the fire between prana and apana = the fire between day and night = the fire between sat (the existent) and asat (the nonexistent) = [the union between Samana and (Nil.)] Vyana = Canti (tranquillity) = eternal Brahman ("as the brahmans know"); in fire the smoke is tamas (darkness), and the ashes rajas (passion). [Nīl. takes all the expressions figuratively in a philosophical sense; according to him the seed (cukra) is = adrehta, i.e. the karman of past lives, the blood (conitam) = attachment to the objects of sense, prana = lingatman, apāna = death, etc.] (XIV, 24); likewise the ancient story of the Caturhotra, i.e. the sacrifice with four hotre; the instrument, the action, the agent, and cmancipation; at the sacrifice of yoga the Prana is the Stotra, etc.  $(\beta)$ ; people knowing Narayana recite some Res; to Narayana animals (i.e. the senses, Nil.) were offered in days of yore; and some Samane; Narayana is the soul of all (XIV, 25); † there is one ruler, residing in the heart, etc.; instructed by him the seven R.'s shine in the firmament; having lived with that instructor, Indra attained to the sovereignty of all the worlds. There is one enemy, residing in the heart; instructed by him all snakes are always hated († v. 746-750). In this connection the old story of the instruction of the snakes, the gods (and As.), and R. by Prejapati is cited; asked by them what is highly beneficial, he said om, i.e. Brahman in one syllable;

then they ran away in various directions from desire of selfinstruction; first arose in the snakes the disposition of biting; in the As. the disposition for ostentatious pride; the gods betook themselves to gifts, and M.-r. to self-restraint (XIV, 26). The brahman compared the world to an impassable fastness (durgam), and Bráhman to a great forest; asked by his wife, he described this forest copiously (XIV, 27); "it is not I, but nature that smells scents, etc." In this connection an ancient discourse between an adhvaryu and a yati is recited: Beholding an animal sprinkled with water at a sacrificial ceremony, a yati blamed the adhvaryu for that destruction of life. The Adhvaryu appealed to the Vedas, saying, "This goat will not be destroyed, but will be benefited; that part of it which is of earth will go to earth," etc.; the yati said that if the sacrifice was to the benefit of the goat, then the goats ought to give their consent; "abstention from cruelty is alone worthy of approbation; one should be guided by perception"; the adhraryu objected that by smelling what belongs to the earth, etc., one takes life, as all these entities have life; the yati distinguished between the indestructible and the destructible of the soul (atmanah); of these only the indestructible is really existent; to him who is freed from all existent objects there is no fear; the adhvaryu admires and praises him, and says that he has no fault by performing those rites according to the mantras; the yati remained silent; the adhvaryu proceeded with the sacrifice (XIV, 28). Follows the ancient story about the 1,000-armed king Kartavīryarjuna and the Ocean; v. Arjuna Kartavīrya (c) and Paraçu-Rāma (d) (XIV, 29) with Alarka (e) (XIV, 30). The brahman said: There are three fees in the world (i.e. ninefold, on account of the three gunas); exultation, satisfaction, and joy < goodness; desire, wrath, and hatred < passion; lassitude, sloth, and delusion < darkness. Persons conversant with the ancient kalpas recite some verses which were sung in days of old by king Ambartsha, who had acquired a tranquil soul: "I have killed all focs, etc., but the greatest vice has not yet been destroyed by me . . . " (XIV, 31). Then the old narrative of the discourse between a brahman and king Janaka (f) is cited (XIV, 32-33). Asked by his wife as to how this knowledge may be acquired, the brahman said: Know that Brahmani (i.e. buddhi, Nil.) is the [lower] arani, the preceptor the upper arani; penances and conversance with the scriptures turn the upper arani; knowledge is the fire produced. Asked by his wife about the symbol (lingam) of Brahman called kshetrajña, the brahman answered that he is without symbols and qualities. Krehna said: Then the mind of that brahman's wife, upon the destruction of the kshotrajña, became that which is beyond the kshetrajñas, in consequence of the knowledge of kshetra. Asked by Arjuna, where now that brahman and his wife were, Krshna said: "My mind (manus) is the brahman, my understanding (buddhi) is the brahmanī; he who has been called kshetrajña is I myself" (XIV, 34).

Brāhmana - māhātmya - kathana. § 454 (Mārk.): Questioned by the Pandavas about the greatness of the brahmans, Markandoya told: A prince of the Haihayas killed a brahman, whom he took for a deer, as he was enveloped in the skin of a black antelope. The Haihayas, very afflicted, set out inquiring as to whose son the muni might be. Arriving at the hermitage of Tarkshya Arishtanemi, they told him the matter, and learnt that it was his son, and that he had been revived, because these munis had no fear of death, as they spoke well of brahmans, etc. (III, 184).—§ 455: Markandeya continued: When the rajarshi Vainya was performing the horse-sacrifice, Atri desired to go and ask him for alms, but gave up his desire of wealth and proposed to his wife and sons that they should all retire to the woods. His wife prevailed upon him that (though he had heard from Gautama that there were brahmans about Vainya who were jealous of him) he should first acquire riches and distribute them to his sons and servants, and so he went to Vainya and praised him as the foremost of sovereigns and the ruler of their destinies (vidhātr). The rshi Gautama blamed him for thus fluttering the king, and said that it was Indra who was the foremost of sovereigns and ruler of their destinies (vidhatr). The munis (having let the pious Kāçyapa inquire about the matter) applied to Sanatkumāra, who said that the brahmans and kshattriyas ought to act together, and that the king (enumeration of honourable appellations) might rightly be styled as Atri had done. Vainya then gave to Atri 1000 maidservants and 100 millions of gold [coins] and ten bharas of gold. Having given this to his sons Atri retired to the forest (III, 185).

Caitraratha' ("son of Citraratha") - Çaçabindu: XII, 998. Caitraratha[m] parvan ("the section relating to Citraratha"). § 10 (Parvasangr.): I, 2, 313 (i.e. Caitrarathaparvan). - § 11 (do.): I, 2, 361 (do.).

Caitrarathaparvan ("the section relating to Citraratha," the eleventh of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Caitraratha[m] parvan.) § 216: Within a few days there came a brahman to the abode of their host, whom they asked to narrate the birth of Dhrshfadyumna from the sacrificial fire, and that of Krehna from the centre of the redi, and that of Cikhandin, and how Dhrehtadyumna learnt the use of all weapons from Drona, and how the friendship of Drona and Drupada was broken (I, 165). - § 217: The brahman related (not mentioning Accatthuman) the birth of Drona (§ 200), his friendship with Drupada, and his visit to Rama (§ 201; he obtained the Brahmastra, v. 6340), the breaking of his friendship with Drupada (§ 202), how Bhishma prevailed upon him to teach the princes, etc. (both Arjuna and the others promised to give what he might ask for his fee, v. 6346), and the chastisoment of Drupada (§ 209; Drupada resides in Chattravati, v. 6348) (I, 166). - § 218. Draupadīsambhava (q.v.).- § 219: Hearing the words of the brahman, the sons of Kunti seemed to be, as it were, pierced with darts. Kunti proposed to Yudhishthira that they should go to the Pañallas, a country they had not seen before, and he consented for his part. When the other brothers had likewise consented, they set out for the town of Drupada (I, 168).-§ 220: When they were living disguised, Vydsa came and told them that formerly the daughter of a rehi, notwithstanding her beauty, obtained no husband, and therefore by austorities propitiated Cankara five times, saying "Give me a husband." Accordingly the god said (notwithstanding her objection) that she should in a future life have five husbands. "That damsel is Krehna, appointed to be the wife of we all: go therefore to the capital of the Pañcales and dwell ye there." He then left them (I, 169).- § 221: After Vyāsa had gone away, the Pāndaras proceeded [towards the Pañcalas] in a northerly direction, walking day and night till they reached the tirtha Somaçrayayana ("the shrine of Rudra with the crescent mark on his brow," PCR. with Nil.). Then they arrived at the Ganga; Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) walked before them, torch in hand. The Gandharva king with his wives was then sporting there in the Ganga. Bending his bow to a circle, he said, "Excepting the first 80 lavas, the muhūrta (prasthānakālam, Nīl.) that begins with the twilight preceding nightfall has been appointed for the Yakshas, Gandharvas, and Rakshasas, capable of going everywhere at will; the rest has been appointed for man to do his work. If therefore men, wandering during those moments from greed of gain, come near us, both we and the rakshasas slay those fools. Therefore persons acquainted with the Vedas never applaud those men, who then approach any piece of water. Stay ye at a distance. Know that I am Anguraparna (= Citraratha, v. 6475; cf. LIA. i, 666/814), tne friend of Kuberg, and this my forest is also called Angaraparna, where neither kaunapas (i.e. rakshasas), nor gringins (a horned animal, see BR.; according to Nil. it is kāpālikāh, a Civaitic sect), nor gods, nor men can come." Arjuna replied: "Whether it be day, night, or twilight, who can bar others from the ocean, the Himalaya, and Gangā?" (b). Arjuna burnt the Gandharva's chariot with the Agneya weapon, given by Brhaspati (the preceptor of Indra) to Bharadvaja, by him to Agnivecya, by him to Drona, by Drong to Arjung, and dragged him, who had become unconscious, by the hair. His wife Kumbhinasi prevailed upon Yudhishthira, and he commanded Arjuna to spare him. He declared that, instead of his former name, Citraratha ("who has a variegated chariot"), he should now be called Dagdharatha ("whose chariot has been burnt"), and imparted to Arjuna the Gandharvi vidya called Cakshushi (c). He also gave Ariung and each of his brothers one hundred horses born in the country of the Gandharvas (Gandharvajānām), endued with the speed of wind and employed in carrying the gods and Gandharvas, a portion of Indra's vajra ("thunderbolt") (d). Arjuna in return gave him the Agneya weapon, and asked him why they, though skilled in the Vedas. had been consured by him. He replied that it was because they were without fires, without sacrifices, and without a brahman walking before them. "The Yakskas, Rakshasas, Gandharvas, Picacas, Uragas, and Danavas know the history of the Kuru race; I have heard from Narada and other devarahis the deeds of your ancestors. I have been vanquished by thee in battle on account of the brahmacarya being rigidly observed; a kehattriya, who is addicted to lust, if he fights in the night, can never escape with life; but even if addicted to lust, he who has a purchita may vanquish all wanderers of the night. Therefore, O Tupatya! kings should always select a fit purchita" (I, 170).—§ 222: Citraratha related Tapatyupūkhyāna (q.v.). — §§ 223-7: Vāsiehtha (q.v.).— § 228 : Aurvopūkhyāna (q.v.).—§ 229 : Vasishtopākhyāna (q.v.).-§ 280 : Dhaumya-purohitakarana (q.v.).

[Chattropanahotpatti] ("the origin of giving umbrellas and sandals at graddhas"). § 752b (Anuçasanik.): Bhīshma said: In ancient times Jamadagni Bhargara was practising with his bow; [his wife] Renukā used to pick up the arrows and bring them back to him. One day, at noontide, when the Sun was in Jyeshthamula, Renuka, her head and feet being scorched by the heat of the Sun, rested for a mement under a tree, whereafter Jamadagni threatened to shoot the Sun. The Sun, in the guise of a brahman, approached him and reminded him that the Sun produces food, etc. (XIII. 95). [Further] questioned by Yudhishthira, Bhishma said: As Jamadagns did not desist from his anger, the brahman reminded him that the Sun is always in motion and cannot therefore be pierced: Jamadagni, knowing Surva, said that the Sun stays at midday for a moment. Then Surya sought his protection, and Jamadagni comforted him, saying "he who would slay one who asks for protection would transcend the simplicity that exists in brahmans, etc. (a)." Sarya presented him with an umbrella and a pair of sandals, saying, "from this day the gift of these articles in all religious rites shall be established as an indispensable usage" (XIII, 96).

[Cyavana - Kuçika - samvāda(h)], "the discourse botween Cyacana and Kuçiku." § 7450 (Cyavanop.): Bhishma said: Cyavana Bhargava saw the stain that would affect his own race and desired to consume the race of the Kuçikas; he came and said to king Kuçika that he desired to dwell with him for some time. Kuçika and his wife welcomed and honoured him; according to his desire, they promised to serve him, while he observed a vow. Once he slept for twenty-one days, while Kuçika and the queen kept themselves awake, foregoing all food; then Cyaruna went out, followed by the king and the queen, and disappeared (XIII, 52); the king with the queen sorrowfully returned to the palace, where he found Cyarana stretched as before on his bed, and sat by his side, while he slept for twenty-one days; then Cyavana ordered them to rub him, and then entered the bathing house, and once more disappeared by means of his yoga-power. The next time, C. was seen on the throne; then he ordered food (description), but reduced it all to ashes, and disappeared. Kuçika with his queen stood there in the same posture the whole night without speaking a word, without giving way to wrath. So it went on every day. Cyavana failed to notice any fault in the conduct of the king. Then he ordered them to yoke themselves to a chariot and pull him along; it should be the king's battle-chariot with every weapon, etc., and the goad (description); they must drag him slowly in the sight of the people, who lamented; suddenly he struck them with the goad, so that they were covered with blood; no food had passed their lips for fifty nights; on his way he began to give away very largely of the king's property. Then Cyavana, delighted, came down from the chariot, unharnessed the royal couple, and granted them a boon; he softly touched them with his hands, the healing virtues of which were like ambrosia, and all their fatigue, etc., was dispelled, and they once more became endued with youth. He dismissed them till the next day, himself remaining on the banks of the Ganga. Meanwhile Cyavana, by his yoga-power, converted that delightful wood on the bank of the Ganga into a retreat full of wealth of every kind and jewels and gems (XIII, 53). The next morning Kucika came with his wife, and saw that palace made entirely of gold, etc. (description), and Aps. and G., and thought that it was the country of the Uttara-Kurus or Indra's abode Amaravati. Cyavana lay stretched on a costly and excellent bed, and at the same time on a mat of kuça-grass. In a moment overything disappeared, Aps., G., etc. Cyavana praised Kucika and his queen; Kucika said that he had a sufficient boon, not having been consumed by the fire of Cyavana's penances; he asked him to expound some doubts (XIII, 54). Asked by Kuçika, Cyavana explained the reason of his conduct: In days past, when the gods had assembled together, he had heard Brahmán say that, owing to a contention between brahman- and kshattriya-energy, there would occur an intermixture in his race; therefore he had resolved to exterminate the Kucikas, but had failed to find any fault with Kucika; seeing the delightful palace he had created, Kuçika had had a foretaste of heaven and had become desirous of the status of a brahman and the merit of penances; "the person who will be the third in descent from thee shall attain to the status of a brahman; through the energy of the Bhrgus, thy grandson will be an ascetic endued with the splendour of fire; I shall set out on a tirthayatra." Kuçika asked in what way the status of brahmanhood would attach to his race (XIII, 55). Cyavana foretold that the Kehattriyas would exterminate the Bhargavas, except Urva, who would cast the fire of his wrath into the mare's mouth (Vadavā-vaktra) in the Ocean; he would have a son Reika, to whom Dhanurveda in its incarnate form would come in order to exterminate all Kshattriyas; he would communicate it to his son Jamadagni:

Kuçiks became filled with joy; Cyavana set out on his tirthayatra; everything fell out as Cyavana had said (XIII, 56). [Cf. Viçvāmitrop., § 721b = XIII, 4.]

[Cyavanopākhyāna(m)], "the episode relating to Cyavana." § 745b (Anuçasanik.): Bhishma said: In days past M.-r. Cyavana Bhargava set himself for twelve years to udavāsa ("dwelling in water") at the confluence (madhys) of the Ganga and Yamuna, and stood there like a wooden post (description). He was caught in the net (description) of some fishers (kaivartah) along with a large number of fish, etc. They were afraid; Cyavana said that he would either die with the fishes or be sold with them. With pale faces the fishers repaired to king Nahusha (XIII, 50), who immediately went to Cyavana with his ministers and priest; Cyavana asked him to pay the price for himself and the fishes; Nahusha ordered large sums to be paid to the Nishadas for Cyavana; but the latter declared that these could not represent his price, even his whole kingdom; Nahusha deliberated with his ministers and priests; then there came an ascetic living in the woods, born of a cow, and said that the cow was equal in value to the brahman; this Cyavana approved of, as svaha- and vashaf-kara are always established upon kine, etc. Cyavana accepted the cow from the fishermen, and caused them along with the fishes to proceed to heaven. The two R. gladdened king Nahusha by granting him many boons; he accepted the boon that he should himself remain firm in virtue. The two R. returned each to his own asylum, and Nahusha to his city (XIII, 51). Asked by Yudhishthira about Rāma Jāmadagnya, etc. (a), Bhīshma recited an old history of the discourse between Cyavana and Kuçika, i.e. Cyavana-Kuçika-samvāda (o) (III, 52-56).

Qākadvīpa, a dvīpa named after the Çāka-tree. § 575 (Bhūmip.): VI, 11a, 402.—§ 575b (do.): Ç. is of twice the extent of Jambudvīpa, and the ocean also is of twice the extent of that island. Ç. is surrounded on all sides by the ocean. The kingdoms there are full of righteousness, and the men never die; there is no famine; the people are all full of forbearance and great energy. There are seven mountains decked with jewels, etc., and many rivers. The mountains are: (1) Meru, the abode of D., R., and G.; (2) Malaya, to the east; there the clouds are generated, and thence they disperse on all sides; (3) Jaladhāra, whence Indra daily takes water, and from that we get showers of rain; (4) Raivataka, over which the constellation Revati is placed by Brahmán himself; (5) on the north of this is Cyana. Because the hue of these mountains is dark, the people residing there are all dark in complexion; (6) Durgaçaila; (7) Keçarin (B. Kesara). The measure of each of these mountains is double that of the one mentioned immediately before. There are seven  $Varshas(\beta)$ , one for each mountain. In the midst is a large tree called Caka, in height and breadth equal to the Jambu-tree in Jambudvipa, and it is always adored by the people. There are many delightful provinces where Civa is worshipped, and thither repair D., Si., and Ca. The people are virtuous, and all the four orders are devoted to their respective occupations. There is no instance of theft. They are free from decrepitude and death, and gifted with long life. The rivers (7) are full of sacred water whence Indra draws water to shower it as rain. Ganga herself is among them. They are all sin-cleansing. There are four sacred provinces (3). There is no king and no punishment, and no person that deserves to be punished: VI, 11, 408, 411, 413, 441. -§ 623 (Rājadh.): XII, 14a, 406 (east of Meru, swayed by Yudhishthira), 407.

One day certain fishermen coming to that lake began to bale out its waters to a lower ground through diverse outlets. He of great forethought, having in vain warned the others, immediately set out through a current and reached another deep lake. The procrastinating one was caught with many others and tied to a string. He of presence of mind thrust himself into the company of those so tied, and remained quietly among them biting the string, and escaped when the fishes were removed to a piece of deep water to be washed. The procrastinating one met with his death (XII, 137).

Cakuntalopākhyāna(m), "episode relating to Çakuntalā." § 133 (Sambhav.): I, 68-70: Dushyanta (q.v.) saw Çakuntalā (§ 134), daughter of Viçvāmitra (q.v.) and Menakā.— § 135: Enumeration of the eight forms of marriage according to Manu. Dushyanta, during the absence of Kanva, wedded Çakuntalā according to the Gandharva form, promising her that her son should be the heir apparent, and departing told her that he should send troops to take her to his capital. Kanva, by his spiritual knowledge, knew what she had done, and approved of it, and bestowed on her the boon that the Paurava monarchs might ever be virtuous and never be deprived of their thrones (I, 73). Cakuntala, after three years, brought forth a beautiful boy, for whom Kanva caused all the religious rites to be performed, and who, when he was only 6 years of age, used to seize and bind to the trees lions, etc., wherefore he was called Sarvadamana. Then Kanva caused his disciples to bring Cakuntaki and the boy to Hastinapura and introduce them to Dushyanta. Then they returned to the hermitage. Dushyanta feigned not to remember anything. Then Cakuntalā became angry ("But knowest thou not the Ancient Wise [munim puranam, i.e. Narayana] who lies in the heart? He who sins is observed by the gods and by him also who occupies every heart. The sun, the moon, the air, fire, earth, sky, water, the heart, Yama, the day, the night, both twilights, and Dharma, all witness the acts of man. Yama Vaivasvata takes no account of the sins of that person with whom [Narayana] the witness of all acts is gratified. But that person with whom he [Narayana] is not gratified is tortured for his sins by Yama . . . The son that is born to persons cognizant of the Vedio mantras rescues the spirits of deceased ancestors. Because the son rescues the father from the hell which is called Put, therefore he has been called puttra by Svayambhū himself . . . Even rahis cannot create creatures without women . . . 'He shall perform a hundred horse sacrifices,' were the words uttered in the skies when I was in the lying-in room . . . Urvaçi, Purvacitti, Sahajanya, Menaka, Viçvaci, and Ghrtaci, these are the six foremost Apsarases; amongst them, again, Monaka, born of Brahmán, is the first . . . I can repair to the abodes of Indra, Kubera, Yama, and Varuna . . . The Pitrs have said that the son continues the race, and he is therefore the best of all religious acquirements . . . Manu has said that there are five kinds of sons . . . "). Then she left his presence. But a voice from the sky commanded Dushyanta to cherish (bhara) his son, who should therefore be called Bharata. It was this voice of the Devaduta that Dushyanta had waited for, that the people should not regard his son as of impure birth. Bharata reduced to subjection all the kings of the earth and became a sarvabhauma-cakravartin, and performed many sacrifices with Kanva as the chief priest. From him has come the Bharata race, of whom the principal ones shall be mentioned (I, 74).

Calyaparvan', the 80th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 346.—§ 609: Requested by Janamejaya (a), Vaiçampāyana related Duryodhana's grief at Karna's slaughter, his resolution to continue the battle, his making Calya the commander of the army; that Calya, having made a great carnage, was slain by Yudhishthira at midnight; that Duryodhana fled away from the field, penetrated into a lake, and in the afternoon was summoned and slain by Bhimasena, who had caused the lake to be encompassed by many warriors; that Açvatthaman, etc. ( $\beta$ ), slaughtered the Pañcala troops in the night; that Sanjaya, next morning, having set out from the camp, entered the city; the grief of the citizens upon hearing Duryodhana's fall; that Sanjaya informed Dhrta $rashtra(\gamma)$  ("on the side of the Pandavas 7 are alive, amongst the Dhartarashtras 3") (δ); Dhrtarashtra's, etc. (ε), glief; that Dhrtarashira ordered Vidura to let the ladies and Gandhari retire, and was comforted by Vidura (IX, 1); Dhriarashtra's lament and how he asked Sanjaya about the battle (ζ) (IX, 2). Sanjaya begins his narration.—§ 610: The fear of the Kurus after the fall of Karna, and the state of the Kuru army  $(\eta)$ ; Duryodhana's resolution to resist the victors  $(\theta)$ ; Bhima and Dhrehtadyumna caused a great carnage; Arjuna proceeded towards the car-division; Nakula, etc. (1), & Cakuni; 25,000 foot-soldiers & Arjuna; they were slain by Dhrehtadyumna (b) and Bhima; the Kuru army broke and fled away; Cokitana, etc. (x), having slain a large number, blew their conchs; Arjuna attacked the rest; they fled; Duryodhana & the Pandavae; Duryodhana rallied his troops ( $\lambda$ ); Duryodhana (+ all his troops) & the Pandavas (headed by Yudhishthira) (IX, 3). Krps urged Duryodhana to make peace (µ) (IX, 4); Duryodhana refused  $(\nu)$ . The troops were filled with enthusiasm; they took up their quarters about two yojanas distant, and bathed in the Sarasvati of red waters on the sacred and beautiful tableland at the foot of Himavat (IX. 5): there they passed the night: Calya, etc. (F), and urged Yudhishthira to continue the battle. Duryodhana addressed Acvatthaman (description) (o), according to whose proposal Calya was made generalissimo ( $\pi$ ) (IX, 6); Calya promised to slay the foes ( $\rho$ ). Calya was anointed; the troops became cheerful ( $\sigma$ ). Calya resolved to slay or be slain (7). No one any longer felt any grief on account of Karna; they slept that night happily and became very cheerful. Yudhishthira asked Krahna his advice (v); Krshņa praised Çalya (Ārtāyani), saying that he was equal to Bhishma, etc.  $(\phi)$ , and superior to Cikhandin, etc.  $(\chi)$ ; he thought only Yudhishthira was a match for Calya, and urged him to slay him. After Krshna had gone, Yudhishthira dismissed all his brothers and the Somakas and slept happily that night, and so did the Pañoalas and the Pandavas, delighted with Karna's fall (IX, 7) .- § 611: THE BATTLE OF THE FORENOON OF THE EIGHTEENTH DAY. After that night had passed away, the Kuru army, urged by Duryodhana, prepared for battle; the leaders, Krpa, etc. (a), resolved to fight unitedly ("or be stained with the five great sins and all the minor sins"). Then, with Calya at their head, they quickly proceeded against the foes. Similarly, the Pandavas. Asked by Dhrtarashira about Calya's slaughter by Yudhishthira and Duryodhana's by Bhimasena, Sanjaya related: Calya proceeded with horses of the Sindhu breed yoked unto his chariot, at the head of the array, accompanied by the Madrakas and the sons of Karna; enumeration of warriors on the left  $(\beta)$ , on the right  $(\gamma)$ , in the rear  $(\delta)$ , in the centre (e); Cakuni and Ulūka surrounded by a large force of The mighty bowmen amongst the Pandavas divided themselves into three bodies, and rushed against the Kurus; Dhrshfadyumna, etc. ( $\zeta$ ), against the army of Calya; Yudhishthira with his troops against Calya alone; Arjuna against Krtavarman and the Samcaptakas; Bhimasena, etc. (1), against Krpa; Nakula and Sahadeva against Cakuni and Uluka. Requested by Dhrtarashtra, Sanjaya enumerated the relative strength of the two armies (0) (IX, 8). The commencement of the battle (description); a terrible slaughter on both sides. Arjuna and Bhimasona stupefied their foes; Dhrehtadyumna, etc. (1), & Çalya; Nakula and Sahadeva proceeded with speed; the Kurus fled away (IX, 9). Calya & Yudhishthira (+ the Pandava host); Nakula & Karna's son Citrasena, whom he slew; Nakula & Citrasena's brothers Satyasena and Sushena; Nakula slew Satyasena, mounted the chariot of Sutasoma, and slew Sushena. The Kurus were rallied by Calva; a great slaughter took place on both sides. Sātyaki, etc. (x), roared like lions, etc. Kyrus surrounded Calya; thither came Arjuna, having slaughtered the Samçaptakas, and the Pandavas headed by Dhrshtadyumna (IX, 10). Calya fought with great heroism against the troops of Yudhishthira; portents appeared on earth and in the skies. Calya & Yudhishthira, etc.  $(\lambda)$ ; many were slain; the Pandava army repaired to Yudhishthira; Krtavarman, etc. (µ), & Bhimasena, etc.; Krtavarman & Bhimasena; Krpa & Dhrehfadyumna; Çakuni & the Draupadeyas; Açvatthaman & the twins; Duryodhana & Krehna and Arjuna; the Bhoja chief slew the brown steeds of Bhimasona; Calya slew the steeds of Sahadeva, who then slew Calya's son; Krps & Dhrehtadyumna; Acvatthaman & the Draupadeyas; once more the steeds of Bhimasena were slain; he crushed the steeds and chariot of Krtavarman, who fled away; Calya & Yudhishthira, etc. (v); Bhīma (with his mace, with which he had challenged Kubera and slain Gh. on Gandhamadana) & Calya (IX, 11); "save Calya or Rāma (the delighter of the Yadus), none else can venture to encounter Bhīma; save Bhīma, none can venture to encounter Calva": Krpa taking up Calya on his own chariot, bore him away; Bhīma had also been made senseless. The Kurus (headed by Duryodhana) & the Pandavas; Duryodhana & Cokitana; Krpa, etc. (5), & Yudhishthira; Duryodhana & Dhrehtadyumna; Acvatthaman (with 3,000 chariots, despatched by Duryodhana) & Arjung: Çalya + Cundrasena + Drumasena & Yudhishthira + 25 Cedis, etc. (o); Yudhishthira was worsted (IX, 12). Sātyaki and Bhimasena, etc. (o) (+ Yudhishihira) & Çalya; Si., etc., were delighted; Duryodhana regarded the Pandavas, Pancalas, and Srnjayas as already slain; the Pandavas & Calya, who agitated the whole Pandava army; D. and G. wondered; the Pandavas with Bhimasona at their head and led by Yudhishthira did not fly (IX, 13). Arjuna & Acvatthaman and the Trigartas: Ariuna destroyed 2,000 chariots; Acvatthaman & the Pañcala Suratha. whom he slow; Açvatthaman and the Samçaptakas & Arjuna (1X. 14). Duryodhana & Dhrshtadyumna; Çikhandin + the Prabhadrakas & Kriavarman and Krpa; Çalya & the Pandaras (with Bhima, etc. (π), and Satyaki); Nakula + Yudhishthira & Calya; Yudhishthira, etc. (p), & Calya; Calya & Bhimasona + Sātyaki (whom he deprived of his chariot); Sātyaki (on another chariot) & Calya (IX, 15). The Pandavas (in the very sight of Krshna and Arjuna, and though checked by Bhimasena) were afflicted by the Kurus (headed by Çalya). Arjuna & Krpa and Krtavarman; Sahadeva & Çakuni; Nakula cast glances on Calya from the side; the Draupadeyas checked numerous kings; Cikhandin & Açvatthaman; Bhimasena & Duryodhana; Yudhishthira & Calya; Calya alone fought with the whole Pandava army; Calya & Bhīma; the Pandaras fled. disregarding the cries of Yudhishthira, who, summoning all his brothers and Krehna, declared that after Bhishma, etc. (a), had been slain, Calya only remained as his share; the sons of Madri should be the protectors of his wheels; Satyaki would protect his right wheel and Dhrshtadyumna his left, Arjuna his rear, Bhima fight in his front. The Pandava troops rejoiced, especially the Pañoalas, etc. (7); Yudhishthira & Çalya; Bhīma & Duryodhana; Dhrehtadyumna, etc. (v), & Çakuni, etc.; Duryodhana was borne away by his steeds; Açvatthaman, etc.  $(\phi)$ , followed him in order to rescue him; the Kaurava troops became terrified; Arjuna began to slay them; Calya was worsted by Yudhishthira; the army of Duryodhana broke; Acvatthaman, taking Calya up on his own chariot, fled away; Calya (on another chariot) & Yudhishthira (IX. 16) + Satyaki, etc.  $(\chi)$ ; the Pāṇḍavas, etc.  $(\psi)$ , & Çalya; the Kurus surrounded Calys at the command of Duryodhans; Krpa slew Yudhishthira's charioteer, and Calya his steeds; Bhimasens slew Calya's charioteer and steeds and out off his armour; Dhrehfadyumna, etc. (w), & Çalya; Yudhishihira slew Calya with a celestial dart (created by Tvashir for the use of Içana, and always worshipped by the Pandavas with perfumes and garlands and excellent seats and the best kinds of viands and drinks). Calya's younger brother & Yudhishthira, who slew him; the Kurus broke; Sātyaki & Krtavarman, whom Krpa carried away on his chariot; Duryodhana alone withstood the Pandava leaders (aa); Krtavarman (on another chariot) + Krpa & Yudhishthira; Krtavarman was carried away by Acvatthaman upon the latter's chariot; Krpa & Yudhishthira. The Parthas blew their conche and applauded Yudhishthira (IX, 17). The followers of Calya (1,700 Madrakas) resolved to avenge him; Duryodhana commanded them not to proceed to battle; they, however, attacked Yudhishthira; Arjuna, etc. (ββ), & the Madrakas, whom they began to slaughter; Duryodhana in vain tried to prevent them from fighting; then, urged by Cakuni, he proceeded to the rescue of the Madrakas. The Pandavas arranged themselves in the form called Madhyama and slew the Madrakas; meteors, etc., were seen; the Parthas encountered a body of horse advancing towards them; the Kuru army fled away (IX, 18). Also the sons of Dhrtarashira almost all turned away from the fight at noon; their fear was like to that after the fall of Bhishma, etc. (77); the Pañoalas and the Pandavas pursued them, and congratulated one another (88). The Srajayas pursued the Kurus; Arjuna & the chariot-division; Nakula, etc. (ee), & Cakuni. Duryodhana rallied 21,000 foot-soldiers, resisted by Bhimasena and Dhrehtadyumna; Bhīma slew them; Yudhishthira's troops in vain tried to transgress Duryodhana. Duryodhana rallied a small force by a spirited address ((\( \sigma\); the Pandavas, especially Arjuna, rushed against them; Nakula, etc. (17), against Çakuni (IX, 19). The Milecoha king Çalva (on an elephant, sprung from a noble breed, and always worshipped by Duryodhana) attacked the Pandavas (+ Somakas and Srnjayas), who fled; Dhrshtadyumna (in order to vanquish the elephant) & Calva; Dhrshtadyumna had his chariot, steeds, and charioteer destroyed by the elephant; Bhīma, etc.  $(\theta\theta)$ , & Çālva (+ the elephant); the Pañcalas, etc. (11), lamented; Dhṛshṭadyumna slew the elephant with his mace, and Satyaki slew Çalva (IX, 20). Krtavarman, rallying a portion of the Kuru army, resisted the Pandavas; Satyaki & king Kehemakirti, whom he slow; Krtavarmon & Sātyaki; the Pāndavas, the Pānculas, etc., became spectators; Krpa carried Krtararman away upon his chariot; the whole army of Duryodhana fled except Duryodhana. who assailed all the Pandavas, etc. (kk); then Krtavarman came (on another chariot) (IX, 21). Duryodhana alone resisted the Pandavas; the Kuru army once more rallied and fought; Duryodhana & Yudhishthira, etc. (λλ); Açvatthāman & Bhīmasena; Cakuni & Yudhishthira, who was carried away by Sahadeva on his chariot; Yudhishthira (on another chariot) & Çakuni; Si. and Ca. applauded; Uluka & Nakula; Krtavarman & Sātyaki; Duryodhana & Dhrshţadyumna; Krpa & the Draupadeyas (IX, 22). The Kurus were broken by the Pāndavas, but rallied by the sons of Dhrtarashtra; Yudhishthira & Krpa and Krtavarman (who was carried away by Acvatthuman); Duryodhana despatched 700 chariots against Yudhishthira; Cikhandin, etc., came to aid Yudhishthira; an awful battle ensued; the 700 were slain; the Pandavas and Pañcalas resisted; terrifying omens in nature were seen. Cakuni exhorted the others to fight in front; he would himself slay the Pandavas from behind; the Madrakas rejoiced, but were slain; Cakuni with 10,000 horsemen assailed the Pandara army in the rear; the force of the Pandaras broke down. Yudhishthira urged Sahadeva to slav Cakuni. aided by the Draupadeyas; Yudhishthira, with the Pañcalas, would himself destroy the chariot-force. Sahadova (with 700 elephants, 5,000 horses, and 3,000 foot-soldiers) + the Draupadeyas & Cakuni, who, with 6,000 horses, went away; similarly, the Pandava force, which was reduced to 6,000 horses: the Draupadeyas proceeded to Dhrehtadyumna, Sahadeva to Yudhishthira; Cakuni & Dhrshtadyumna's division; after a terrible battle the Pandaras encompassed Cakuni (IX, 23). Cakuni exhorted the remainder of his following, 700 horses. and urged Duryodhana to attack the Pandavas ( $\mu\mu$ ); the remnant of the Kuru army attacked the Pandavas; Arjuna (desiring to exterminate the Kurus) addressed Krshna. recounting the loss sustained by the Kurus (vv), and attacked the remnant of the Kuru army, and caused a great slaughter (IX, 24). Dhrshiadyumna, etc. (EE), & the chariot-force; Duryodhana escaped on horseback to Cakuni: 3,000 elephants encompassed the Pandava brothers, and were slain by Arjuna and Bhima, etc. (00). Acvatthaman, etc.  $(\pi\pi)$ , enquired about Duryodhana, pierced through Dhrshtadyumna's force, and proceeded to Cakuni. Pandavas, headed by Dhrehtadyumna, assailed the Kurus. Sanjaya (having joined the five leaders and posted his men. who had been afflicted by Arjuna, by Krpa) & Dhrehtadyumna; Satyaki & Sanjaya, who was made captive; Bhima and Arjuna destroyed the elephants; Acratthaman, etc., seeking Duryodhana, proceeded to Cakuni (IX, 25). Eleven sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra: Durmarshaṇa, etc. (ρρ), & Bhīmasena, who slew them. Bhimasena then slew 500 chariot-warriors, 10,000 foot, 700 elephants, and 800 horses (1X, 26). Duryodhana and Sudarça (the only sons of Dhrtarashtra yet unslain) were in the midst of the cavalry. Krshna urged Ariuna to destroy the remnant of Duryodhana's troops  $(\sigma\sigma)$ ; Arjuna assented  $(\tau\tau)$ ; "only 500 horses form the remnant of the troops of Cakuni . . . ; there remain also Acvatthaman, etc. (vv)." Bhimasena, etc.  $(\phi\phi)$ , & Duryodhana + Çakuni; Dhṛtarūshṭra's son Sudarçana & Bhīmasena; Suçarman and Çakuni & Arjuna; Duryodhana (on horseback) & Sahadeva. Ariuna & the Trigartas; Arjuna slew Satyakarman, Satyeshu, and the Prasthala ruler Sucarman, and the latter's thirty-five sons, etc., and then proceeded against the remnant of the Bharata host. Bhīma slew Sudarçana (Dhārtarāshtra), and completed the destruction of the Kaurava army (IX, 27). Cakuni & Sahadeva; Ulūka & Bhīmasena; Sahadeva sat down on his chariot; Bhīma and Sahadeva & Çakuni's men, who fled away, but were rullied by Duryodhana; Sahadeva + Nakula and Bhīma & Cakuni + Ulūka; Sahadeva slew Ulūka; Cakuni (recollecting the words of Vidura) & Sahadeva; Çakuni's division and Cakuni himself fled away, pursued by Sahadeva, who slew him (IX, 28).

Cantanupakhvana(m) ("episode relating to Cantanu"). § 162 (Sambhav.): The rajarshi Pratipa spent many years in ascetic penances at the source of Gangā. She sat upon his right thigh and wished him to be her husband. He replied that the left lap was for the wife, but the right for the daughters and daughters-in-law; therefore he accepted her for his son, to which Ganga consented on the condition that his son should not be able to judge of the propriety of her acts. Then Pratipa, along with his wife, engaged in ascetic austerities from desire of offspring, and when they had grown old, Mahābhisha (v. Mahābhishop.) was born as a son to them and was called Cantanu, because his fither had controlled his passion (cantasya santanah, v. 3882, of. 3799). When Cantanu had grown to become a youth, Pratipa told him about his appointment with the celestial damsel, installed him upon the throne, and retired into the woods. Cantanu, who was addicted to hunting, one day came upon the banks of Ganga, frequented by Siddhae and Caranas, and there he requested Ganga, in the form of a lovely maiden, to become his wife (I, 97). (For continuation v. Bhishmotpatti.)

[Qapathavidhi] ("the taking of oaths"). § 751b (Anuçāsanik.) († vv. 4549-4561). Bhīshma said: Once B.-r and R.-r. proceeded to the western Prabhāsa, and resolved to visit all the sacred waters on earth; there were Çukra, etc. (α), and Indra; they reached Kauçikī on the day of full-moon in the month of Magha, and then Brahmasaras, where they gathered and ato the stalks of the lotus; Agastya's stalks had been taken away; he complained of the increasing unrighteousness, and thought of going to heaven in order not to live to see yet worse things; the R. took, each of them, the most frightful oaths to their own innocence (β); but Indra uttered "a benediction instead of a curse," and confessed that he had stolen the stalks, not from cupidity, but from desire of hearing what R. would say. Agastya forgave him. Then they proceeded to other tirthas *(XIII, 94).

Yasç. said: The maharshi Gotama had a son Caradvat, born with arrows. C. studied the Dhanurveda in preference to the Yedas, and by his austerities he came to master all weapons. Indra was afraid of him, and sent the devakanyā (cf. v. 5078: apearasam) Jānapadī to disturb him. He fled from her; but from his seed that had fallen upon a clump of reeds (carastambe) sprung two children, whom a soldier found and brought to king Cantanu. Cantanu, from pity (kṛpā, v. 5089), brought them up as his own children, whence he called them Kṛpa and Kṛpī. Ç. by his tapas learnt what had happened and came to Cantanu and told him his lineage, etc. He then instructed Kṛpa in the fourfold Dhanurveda and various castras, and in Carngakopakhyana(m) ("episode relating to the carngaka birds"). § 259 (Khandavad.): Janamejaya said: "Why did the carngakas escape?" Vaicampayana said: When the maharshi Mandapala, who was an urdhvaretas, had finished his tapas, he left his body and went to Pitrloka, but did not obtain the expected result of his acts, and learned from the gods sitting around Dharmaraja that it was because he had no offspring. He then reflected how he could obtain numerous offspring in the shortest time possible; he learnt that the birds were peculiarly prolific, and, becoming a carrigiks, he married the carngika Jarita, and begat upon her four sons, who were all reciters of the Vedas. Then he left her and married Lapita. When Agni came to the forest of Khandava to burn it down, Mandapala praised Agni (vv. 8353-8360) and prevailed upon him to spare his children (I, 229). Jarita told her sons (Jaritari, Sarierkva, Stambamitra, and Drona), who would have her to rescue herself by abandoning them, to conceal themselves in the hole of a mouse: but they were afraid of the mouse (I, 230). Finally Jarita was prevailed upon by her sons to abandon them, and Agni approached the spot where the sons were (I, 231). The four young rehis praised Agni, who promised them safety and granted them a boon. Drong asked him to consume the cats that troubled them every day (I, 232). Meanwhile Mandapāla addressed Lapitā, being anxious about his children. Lapita, from jealousy, told him to go to Jarita, who, she said, was the real cause of his anxiety. When Agni had spared the children, Jarita came and embraced them. When Mandapāla came they did not speak to him, and Jarita, from jealousy, told him to go to Lapita. Mendapale declared that nothing was so destructive to the happiness of women as a concubine, except a lover; witness Arundhall (b). Then all his children came forward to worship him, and he also spoke kindly to them all (I, 233). Mandapala told that he had asked Agmi to protect them, and therefore he had not come earlier. Then he took his wives and sons with him and went away to some other country (I, 234).

Cicupalavadhaparvan ("of the killing of Cicupala," the 27th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr., cf. Cicupalavadha). § 290 : As Yudhishthira was afraid that his sacrifice might be obstructed, Bhishma consoled him, saying that Krshna was invincible (II, 40). Çiçupāla again consured Bhīshma and Krshna, and compared Bhishma to the old swan, who always preached of virtue, so that the other birds gave him food and kept their eggs with him; but the old swan used to eat up their eggs, till he was found out and slain (II, 41). Cicupala censured Krshna's behaviour towards Jarasandha; Bhīma rushed up in anger, but was restrained by Bhīshma, while Cicupala was boasting (II, 42). Bhishma said: Cicupala was born with three eyes and four hands, and braved like an ass; his parents resolved to abandon him, but were prevented by an incorporeal voice who foreboded that that man in whose lap the child would be sitting, when its superfluous arms would fall down and the third eye on its forehead disappear, should be its slayer. Though the child was placed upon the laps of 1,000 kings, this came not to pass until Rama and Krehna went to the capital of the Cedis to see their father's sister (the mother of Cicupala), when the boy was placed on the lap of Krshna; then the arms fell down and the eye disappeared. Krshna granted to Cicupala's mother the boon that he would pardon 100 offences of Cicupala's (II, 43). Bhishma declared that Krshna himself had wanted to provoke the boast of Cicupala. reproached Bhishma because he did not rather praise the other kings (a), such as the Balhika king Darada (b), or Karna (c), etc.: he compared Bhishma to the bird Bhulinga (d). Bhishma expressed his contempt for such talk. The kings became angry and proposed to kill Bhishma, who relied upon Krshna (II, 44). - § 291: Çiçupāla challenged Krehna, being desirous to slay him with all the Pandavas. Krshna related (a) how Cicupala, hearing that the Satvalas had gone to Pragjyotisha, came and burnt Dvaraka; (b) that when king Bhoja was sporting on the Raivataka hill, he fell upon his attendants and tlew many of them and led many away in chains to his own city: (c) in order to obstruct the sacrifice of Krshna's father, he stole the sacrificial horse that had been let loose under the guard of armed men; (d) that he ravished the reluctant wife of Babhru on her way from Hastinapura (so Nil.) to the Sauviras; (e) that disguising himself in the attire of the Kārūsha king, he had ravished Bhadra Vaicālt (i.e. daughter of the king of Viçala, Nil.); (f) that he had desired Rukmini, but failed to obtain her; (g) that he (Krshna) had promised to pardon him 100 times, and that the number had now become full. Krshna then thought of his discus, which came into his hand; therewith he instantly cut off the head of Cicupala; the kings beheld a fiery energy issuing out of the body of Cicupals and entering Krehns's body; the sky, though cloudless, poured showers of rain, etc. Yudhishthira caused his brothers to perform the funeral rites of Cicupala, the son of Damaghosha; then he, with all the kings, installed the son of Cicupala in the sovereignty of the Codis.- § 292, v. He pierced the Prajapati Daksha's sacrifice; D. and As. became stupofied, etc. (description); the Rshis performed propitiatory rites; Civa tore out the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Pushan (with his foot); the gods recited the Catarudriya. At last Civa became gratified and the gods assigned a large share [of the sacrificial offerings] to him; the sacrifice, which had been severed into two pieces, became once more united. The Asuras had in days of yore three cities in the sky (of iron, silver, and gold respectively); Indra was unable to pierce them; the gods then repaired to Rudra (Civa), who made Vishņu his shaft-head, etc.  $(\gamma)$ , and pierced the city and burnt it together with the Asuras. Beholding Mahadeva (Civa) transformed into a child with five locks of hair, lying upon the lap of Parvati, the latter asked the gods who he was. Indra resolved to kill him with his thunderbolt, but the child paralysed his arm; the gods and the Prajapatis could not realise that it was the lord of the universe, but Brahmán by his penances found out that it was Mahadeva, and praised him, and so did the gods; Indra's arm became restored. Taking birth as Durvasas, Civa resided for a long time at Dvaravati in my house. He is Rudra, etc. (δ) (XIII, 161). Krshna continued: "Civa has two forms: (1) one which is terrible (= Agni, lightning, and Surya) and engaged in all operations of destruction; (2) one which is mild and auspicious (= Righteousness, water, and the moon) and engaged in brahmacarya. These two forms again are subdivided into many forms. Half his body is Agni (fire), half is Soma (the moon)." Then Krshna enumerated and explained many of Civa's names, (c) R., D., G., and Aps. worship that emblem of his which is always erect and upraised. He loves to reside in crematoria, and there he burns and consumes all corpses; those persons who perform sacrifices there attain to the regions set apart for heroes. The brahmans know the Catarudriya in the Veda and the adoration (upasthanam) [of the same name] which is composed by Vyasa. Civa created Agni from his mouth. The lordship of Cakra, etc., is verily his. It is he whose mouth is roaring in the waters of the sea in the form of the huge mare's head (XIII, 162): XIII, 1618, 7496; 162, 7503, 7511 (why he is so called).—§ 778b (Samvartta-Maruttīya): XIV, 8a, 193, 208, 210 (C. resides on Munjavat, enumeration of his names (Carva, etc.)).—§ 782g (Guruçishyasamv.): XIV, 430, 1178 (paçunam içvarah).—§ 7950 (Mahūbharata): XVIII, 6, 258 (°sya bhavane).

Craddhā' ('Faith'), daughter of Daksha and wife of Dharma. § 115 (Amçāvat.): I, 66, 2578.

Çraddhā (do.), daughter of Vivasvat. § 680b (Tulādhāra-Jājali-sumv.): XII, 265, 9449 (Vaivasvatī Sūryasva duhita Savitrī, cf. the allegoric explanation of Nīl.), 9450.

Crāddhadeva! = Manu: XII, 4507.

Çrāddhadeva = Vivasvat : XII, ††18219 (Mārttaņļo Vivasvān).

Craddhaparvan (°va), "the section relating to the Craddha," the 87th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 349.- 620: Krehna consured Gandhari. saying that this vast carnage had taken place by her fault. through her son Duryodhana; and told her not to grieve ("the cow brings forth offspring to bear burthens . . . the Cūdrā woman to increase the number of servitors . . . a princess, like thee, brings forth sons to be slaughtered"). Requested by Dhrtarashtra, Gandhari remained silent. Yudhishthira said that one billion 660,020,000 men had fallen; and 24,165 had escaped; the fallen had all attained to regions like those of Indra (specifying those who had attained to G., Gh., Brahmaloka, and Uttarakurus). Yudhishthira said that in the forest he had obtained the gift of spiritual vision from D.-r. Lomaça. Urged by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Yudhishthira ordered Sudharman, etc. (a), to cause the funeral rites of the slain  $(\beta)$  to be duly performed; they burned them upon funeral pyres; the Pitrmedha-rites were performed for some of the illustrious dead; by the noise of samans, res, and lamentations all creatures became stupefied that night. Then Yudhishthira and Dhrtarashtra proceeded towards the Gangā (XI, 26). The Kuru ladies, etc., performed the water-rites for their fellow-kinsmen at the Ganga. Kunti, in a paroxysm of grief, disclosed the truth about Karna's birth (y) to her sons. The Pandavas grieved, and Yudhishthira lamented, hearing that Karna was his elder brother  $(\delta)$ . Yudhishthira caused Karna's wives, etc., to be brought before him, and with them performed the water-rite in honour of Karna (XI, 27).

[Crī-Vāsava-samvāda(h)] ("the discourse between Crī and Indra"). § 674b (Mokshadh.): Bhishma said: Nārada, who through his penance beholds both this and the other world at once, etc., wandered through the three worlds. Once at dawn he performed his ablutions in the Gangā (Dhruvadvārabhavām), and so did Indra. They listened to the narratives told by the great D.-r. They hymned the rising Sun, and then in the opposite direction beheld a luminous object riding on Vishnu's vehicle adorned with Garuda and Sūrya; it was Crī with many Aps. (description); her names: Padma, etc. (a). She said that they had formerly dwelt with the Asuras in consequence of her disposition to be bound by truth and merit; seeing, however, that the Asuras had assumed perverse natures, she had left them and wished to reside with Indra. Requested by Indra, she told that she had dwelt with the Asuras on account of their good behaviour, but after they had fallen off from virtue, she had deserted Dai, and Da, and had come to Indra; "there where I reside, the seven other goddesses  $(\beta)$  and Jaya as the eighth, who love me, etc., desire to live; all of them and myself, having deserted As., have come to thee." D.-r., Nărada, and Indra gave her a hearty welcome. Vāyu, the friend of Agni, began to blow gently; all the deities assembled; heaven began to shower nectar upon the region of Brahmán, etc.; Indra began to pour rain; no one deviated from the path of rightcousness, etc.; D., K., Y., Ra. became cheerful, etc. (XII, 229).

Cukabhipatana(m) ("the flying about" of Cuka): XII, 332-334 (12557-12649) (continued from Cuka-Nāradasamrāda, q.v.). § 716: Hearing the words of Narada, Cuka understood that great misery follows the acquisition of children and wives, and that one has to undergo great labour in order to acquire science and Vedic lore. He resolved to attain to the highest end, that is fraught with the greatest felicity, and whence there is no return into the ocean of births; "that cannot be attained without yoga; I shall therefore have recourse to yoga, and throwing off this body I shall become transformed into wind and enter the Sun; for he does not wane like the Moon (Soma) with the gods; when after death one onters the moon he falls to earth and thence ascends to heaven; with the great Rshis I shall enter the energy of the Sun; I declare before all the creatures . . . earth, . . . D., Da., G., Pc., U., Ra., and R., that I shall enter all creatures in the world." Obtaining Narada's permission, Cuka went to Tyasa, who asked him to stay there for the day that he might behold him for some time. But Cuka, only intent on emancipation, immediately left him and proceeded to Kailāsa, which was inhabited by crowds of ascetics (XII. 332). Having reached the summit of Kailäsa, Cuka set himself to practise yoga (description). Having then obtained the permission of Narada, he soured into the skies and identified himself with the element of wind; Aps. (Pañcacuda, etc.), G., R., etc., wondered. Cuka proceeded in silence, his face turned towards the east, regarding the sun; then to the Malaya mountain; Urvaçi and Pūrvacitti, who always dwell on Malaya, wondered. Cuka asked the gods, etc., to return his father an answer from him, if he should repeatedly call on him (XII, 333). Cuka freed himself of the four kinds of faults, the eight kinds of tamas, the five kinds of rajas, the attribute of sattva, and then dwelt in Bráhman. Meteors began to shoot, etc.; Indra poured showers of rain; Himarat and Meru (the one yellow, made of gold; the other white, made of silver), each 100 yojanas in height and breadth, were in close contact with each other. Journeying towards the north, Cuka clashed against them, and they were immediately broken in two. He was adored by G., R., Y., Ra., and Vidyadharas. He saw from a high region the celestial stream Mandākinī running below, with many Aps. Beholding Cuka, who was bodyless, those unclad aërial beings felt no shame. Vyāsa followed behind him on the same acrial path, by means of high Yoga. Cuka, above the region of the wind, identified himself with Brahman. R. represented to Vyasa the achievements of his son. He indulged in lamentations; Çuka, who had entered the universe, had become the soul of everything, and had acquired omnipresence, answered by uttering bho in the form of an echo, and the entire universe echoed the answer of Cuka from that time; mountain caves and mountain sides still scho sounds uttered there. Having cast off all the attributes of sound, etc., and showing his yoga prowess in the manner of his disappearance, Cuka in this way attained to the highest station. Vydsa sat down and began to think of his son with grief; the Aps. who were sporting on the banks of the celestial stream Mandākinī saw him seated there, and all became agitated with shame. Civa, with D., G., and great R., came and comforted Vydsa, who by the favour of Civa thenceforward always beheld a shadow of his son by his side. "This Nārada and Vyāsa repeatedly told me in days of yore" (XII, 334). [PCR. rightly remarks that, according to this story, Cuka who recited the Bhāgavata to Parikshit, the grandson of Yudhishthira, could not possibly be the Cuka who was Vyāsa's son.]

Cukakrti(h) ("the works of Cuka"). § 713 (Mokshadh.): XII. 326-7 (12215-12311) (continuation of Cukotpatti). Bhishma said to Yudhishthira: Vyasa desired Cuka to study the Mokshadharma; Çuka mastered all the treatises on yoga, as also the science promulgated by Kapila. Then Vyūsa caused him to go to Janaka, the king of Mithila, and not to the skies (by his yoga power); nor should he think himself superior to Janaka, though he was only his yaiya. Crossing the Varshas of Merw and Hari and Himavat (Meror Hare; ca dve varshe varsham Haimavatan tatah), Çuka came to Bharatavarsha. Having seen many countries inhabited by Cinas and Hunas, he reached Aryavarta, and at last the country of the Videhas, protected by Janaka, and then Mithila. He had not been fatigued on the way. He obtained permission to enter the city, but was at first roughly forbidden to enter the palace. At last he was admitted into the first chamber; thence he was led into the second chamber by the minister, and thence into a garden that was like a second Cailraratha, with damsels equal to the Aps., who entertained Cuka and gave him to cat; he, however, went unaffected through his rites, and in the first part of the night be devoted himself to yoga (XII, 326). The next morning he was received by Janaka, and was instructed by him about moksha and the duties of a brahman; "ordinarily the purified understanding necessary for attaining moksha cannot be obtained without passing through all four stages of religious life; but he who in the course of many births has obtained a pure mind, may attain to moksha even in the very first stage (i.e. brahmacarya), and then there is no need for the three other stages," quoting a saying of king Yayati; "through the favour of thy father I have acquired to omniscience; thy knowledge is much greater than what you think it to be" (XII, 327). (For continuation v. Cukakrtya.)

Cukakrtya(m) ("the works of (luka"). § 714 (Mokshadh.): XII, 328-9 (12312-12421) (continuation of Cukakrti). Bhishma said to Yudhishthira: Having heard the words of Janaka, having entered Soul by [his | soul and having seen Self by his self (ātmānam ātmanāsthāya drshţiā cātmānam ātmanā), Çuka without putting further questions to Janaka, proceeded northwards to Caiçira (through the air). At that time Narada proceeded to Himarat (b). Then Cuka came to the asylum of Vyāxa. One day the disciples asked Vyāsa to let no sixth disciple be skilled in the Vyūsa answered that they ought to multiply, and the Veda to be spread, and taught them the qualifications of persons that can be accepted as disciples, and the rules in respect of the study of the Veda (XII, 328). The disciples of Vyasa took leave of him and descended from the mountain to the carth for the purpose of subdividing the

Vedas; there they performed the agnishtoma, etc., at the sacrifices of Brahmans, Kshattriyas, and Vaiçyas, and taught the Veda. Vydsa remained with Cuka, passing his days in anxious thoughtfulness. Narada came and asked him why Vedic sounds were silent now, so that the mountain now resembled a hamlet of Nishadas, and R., D., and G. did no longer shine as before; and exhorted Vyāsa to recite the Veda and thereby dispel the fears arising from Ra. Vyasa and Cuka then set themselves to recite the Veda. One day a violent wind arose which Vyasa declared to be an omen that the recitation of the Veda should be suspended; and he explained the Decayana and the Pitryana, and the Winds (Samana, etc. [g]; cf. Sadhyah), especially Pravaha (h), Avaha (1), Udvaha (j), Somvaha (k), Vivaha (l), Parivaha (m), Paravaha (n); "this wind is the breath of Vishnu's nostrils." Having said this Vyasa plunged into the celestial Ganges. (For continuation v. Çuka-Naradasamrida.)

Cuka-Nārada-saṃvāda(h) ("conversation between Q. and N."). § 715 (Mokshadh.): X11, 330-332 (12422-12556) (continued from Çukakrtya). Bhīshma said to Yudhishthira: Nārada then came to Çuka for the object of asking Çuka the meaning of certain portions of the Veda. Nārada related what Sanatkumāra had said in days of yore to certain Rshis about avoiding attachment, etc., in order to attain to final emancipation; "with the aid of such instructions the deities succeeded in leaving the earth and became the denizens of heaven." Cukotpatti(h) ("origin of Cuka"). § 712 (Mokshadh.): XII, 324-325 (12158-12214). Questioned by Yudhishthira about Cuka, whose mind became bent on Brahman when he was a mere boy, Bhishma answered: The R. did not make merit depend upon age, etc., but upon the study of the Vedas and upon tapas; the merit of 1,000 horse-sacrifices or 100 rajapeyas cannot come up to even it of the merit that arises from yoga. Once on the summit of Meru, Mahadeva sported with his followers and Parrati, while Pyasa, devoted to yoga and dhāraṇā, practised austerities for 100 years for the sake of obtaining a son, subsisting on air alone, adoring Mahadera. Thither went R., B.-r., Lp., S., V., A., R., Sarya, Candramas, Indra, M., the Oceans, the Ruces, A., D., G., Nārada, Parvata, Viçrārasu, Si., and Aps. This has been told to me by Markandrya. Civa granted him that he would have a son like to Fire, Wind, Earth, Water, and Space, and devoted to Bráhman (XII, 324). Vyūsa was one day employed in rubbing his sticks to make a fire, when he beheld the Aps. Ghrtaci, and fell in love with her. When Çukra. 220

she approached, transformed into a she-parrot, he dropped his seed, which became a son, who, from this circumstance, came to be called by the name of Cuka. Ganga came and bathed him in her waters; G. sung, and Aps. danced, etc. Viçvavasu, Tumburu, Na., Hāhā, and Hūhū eulogized the birth of Cuka; there came Lp. with Cakra, D., D.-r., and B.-r.; Maruta showered celestial flowers; Civa, together with Parvati, invested Cuka with the sacred thread; Cakra gave him a celestial kamandalu and celestial robos, etc. As soon as Cuka was born, the Vedas, including the mysteries and abstracts (sarahasyāḥ sasangrahāḥ), came to dwell in him, just as they dwelt in his father. Cuka selected Byhaspati for his preceptor, remembering the universal practice. Having studied the Vedas, the tradition (itihāsam), and the state policy (rājaçāstrāņi), Cuka returned home, after paying his preceptor the tuition fee. Adopting the vow of a brahmacarin he practised the hardest penances, even in his childhood. Taking no pleasure in the three modes of life (the domestic, etc.), he only kept in view the law of emancipation (mokehadharmanudarçinah) (XII, 325). (For continuation v. Çukakrti.)

[Cyena-kapotākhyāna(m)] ("the story of the hawk and the pigeon"). § 738b (Ānuçāsanik.): Bhīshma said: Once a pigeon, pursued by a hawk, dropped down from the skies and sought the protection of the Kāçi king R.-r. Vrshadarbha (or Uçinara), etc. [cf. Çyenakapotīya (§ 411 = III, 130 foll.), but here the birds are not Indra and Agni]. The three worlds together with Indra came to behold the king; he was bathed in a shower of nectar, etc.; D., G., and Aps. began to sing and dance around him, just as they do around Brahmán; he then ascended a celestial chariot and proceeded to the eternal heaven. Blessing upon the reader.

Cyenakapotīya(m) ("the episode relating to the hawk and the pigeon"). § 11 (Parvasangr.): 1, 2, 448 (om upākhyānam). - § 411 (Plakshav.): Indra in the shape of a hawk and Agni in that of a pigeon in fear of the hawk came to test king Uçinara's merit (III, 130). Ucinara in vain offered the hawk another beast, and thereafter his kingdom, in order that he might spare the pigeon ("he who slave a brahman, he who slaughters a cow, the common mother of all the worlds, and he who forsakes one asking for protection, are equally sinful "); at last the hawk agreed upon receiving the pigeon's weight of Uçinara's flesh; Uçinara cut portion after portion of his flesh and placed it in the balance, and as it did not outweigh the pigeon he mounted the scale himself, utterly devoid of flesh. Then Indra said: "As long as man shall speak of thee, so long . . . thou shalt inhabit the holy regions." Saying this Indra ascended to heaven, and so did king Uçinara in a radiant shape, after having filled heaven and earth with his merits (III, 131).

Çyenī. § 126 (Amçāvat.): I, 66, 2620 (daughter of Tāmrā), 2621 (mother of the hawks).—§ 127 (do.): I, 66, 2632 (wife of Aruna and mother of Sampāti and Jaţāyus).

[Daksha-yajña - vināça(h)] ("the destruction of Daksha's sacrifice "). § 695b (Mokshadh.): Vaiçampāyana(!) eaid: In days of yore Daksha made arrangements for performing a sacrifice on the top of Rimavat in that sacred region inhabited by R. and Si., G. and Aps., where the Gangā issues out of the mountains. The gods, etc. (a), came there. R. Dadhica in wrath and grief said that this was no sacrifice, since Rudra (Qiva) was not adored in it, etc.; he the great yogin, saw into the future; he beheld Civa seated with Narada and Uma. Daksha said he knew the eleven Rudras with lances and matted locks, but he did not know who this Mahecvara was. Daksha said that he would perform the sacrifice unto Vishnu. Umā felt grief. said that it is to him as the Lord of Sacrifices that the chanters utter their praises in sacrifices, etc. (3). Then he created from his mouth a terrible being (description), and Umā herself, assuming the terrible form of Mahākāli, proceeded in the company of that being, that was the living embodiment of Civa's wrath and resembled Civa himself, and came to be called Virabhadra. He then created from the pores of his body a large number of spirit-chiefs named Raumyas. These Rudras attacked the sacrifice (description; R., D., and men looked pale) and began to set fire to everything, and tore off the head of the sacrifice. D. and Brahmán and Daksha, informed by Virabhadra, hymned Civar (7), who, asked by Daksha, granted to him the boon that his sacrificial articles should be of use to him. Then Daksha knelt down and uttered his 1008 names (v. Daksha-prokta-Civa-sahasranāmastotra).

Dambhodbhavopākhyāna(m) ("the episode relating to Dambhodbhava"). (Cf. Dambhodbhavasya akhyanam.) § 563 (Bhagavady.): There was a king of yore named Dambhodbhava, who was at the head of the earth; his sovereignty extended over the whole world. Every morning he used to ask if there were anyone superior or even equal to himself. Certain brahmans counselled him to curb his pride; and as he continued to ask the brahmans the same question day after day, some high-souled brahmans mentioned to him the ascetics Nara and Narayana, "who have taken their birth in the race of men, and are now practising penances on Gandhamādana." The king marched to the spot with a large army, and found them emaciated with hunger and thirst, etc. He desired a battle with them. The Rehis declined; but as he repeatedly summoned them to fight. Nara took up a handful of grass-blades, and therewith baffled all their arrows and cut off the eyes and ears and noses of the warriors. The king fell at the feet of the Rehis and said, "Let me be blessed." Nara then told him to be obedient to the brahmans and be virtuous. The king returned to his city, and from that time began to practise righteousness.

Devayant sent Ghurnika to inform Cukra of what had passed (I, 78-79). Cukra threatened Vrshaparvan that he would leave the Asuras, until Carmiehtha, together with 1,000 maidens, was given to D. (I, 80). Surrounded by Carmishtha and 2,000 maidens, Devayant one day again met Yayati, who at her request received her in marriage from Cukra, and promised that he would never invite Carmishtha to share his bed (I, 81): I, 78, 3284, 3285, (3285), 3290, (8297), 3802, (3303), 3307, (3309), 3314; 79, 3319, 3321, (3326); 80, 3341, 3343, 3344, (3345), 3346, (3347), 3348, 3350, 3351, (3354), 3356, (3357); 81, 3359, 3363, 3364, (3367), (3370), (3373), (3375), 3376, (3377), (3379), (3382), (3383), 3386, (3388), 3392, 3395.— § 147: Devayani gave birth to a son. After 1,000 years had elapsed, Carmishtha attained to puberty and prevailed upon Yayati to beget a son also with her (I, 82); to Devayani she said that she had born the child to a rehi whose name she had not dared to ask. The sons of Devayani were Yadu and Turvasu, those of Carmishtha were Druhyu, Anu, and Puru. One day, when Dovayani was walking in the wood together with Yayati, she met the children of Carmishtha and asked them: "Who is your father?" They then pointed to Yavati. Devavant in anger withdrew to Uçanas, followed by Yayati. Uçanas cursed Yayati to be overcome by decrepitude, yet with the permission of transferring it to someone else, and he added that that son of Yayati who would give him his own youth should succeed Yayāti on the throne, etc. (I, 83): I, 82, 3397, 3398, 3400, 3401, 3404, 3411, 3419; 83, 3424, 3425, (3425), (3428), (3430), 3432, 3434, (3436), (3437), 3439, (3442), 3446, (3451), 3461.—§ 148 (Yayati): I, 85, 3519 (°yāķ sutaņ . . [Dhaumya-purohitakarana] ("the Pāṇḍavas' making Dhaumya their purohita"). § 230 (Caitrarathap.): Arjuna gave his Agneya weapon to the Gandharva Citraratha and said: "Let the horses you give us remain with you for some time; when occasion comes we will take them from you." Then the Pāṇḍavas took leave of the Gandharva, and left the hanks of the Bhāgīrathī. At that time Dhaumya, the younger brother of Devala, was dwelling at the tirtha named Utkocaka, engaged in ascetic penances. According to the counsel of the Gandharva, the Pāṇḍavas installed Dhaumya in the office of their purohita, and became his yājyas. Then they resolved to go to the evayamvara of Pāñodlī (i.e. Kṛshṇā) (I, 183).

[Dhundhumāropākhyāna(m)] ("the episode about the slayer of Dhundhu"). Cf. Dhaundumära(m) upākhyāna(m). § 474 (Markund.): The great rehi Uttanka, in his hermitage in the wilderness, by severe penances for numberless years obtained that Vishau appeared to him, and having been praised by him (vv. 13494-13503) (a), granted him that he should always remain virtuous and devoted to Vishnu, and that he should obtain a yoga power and urge Kuvalāçva (son of Brhadaçva of Ikshvāku's race), who had been furnished with yoga power from Vishnu, to kill the Asura Dhundhu (III. 201).- § 475: After the death of Ikshvaku, Caçada was king in Ayodhyā. List of Caçada's descendants: Caçada > Kakutetha > Anenae > Prthu > Viçvagaçva > Adri > Yuvanāçva > Çrava> Çravastaka (who built Çravasti) > Brhadaçva > Kuvalāçva > 21,000 sons. — § 476 : Having installed Kuvalāçva on the throne, Brhadaçva retired into the forest as an ascetic. Then Uttanka asked him first to slay the Daitya chief Dhundhu (son of Madhu and Kaitabha), who dwelt underground in the sea Ujjālaka, which was full of sand, in the desert, practised austerities with a view to destroy the gods and the three worlds, Brahmán having granted him that he could not be slain by gods, Daityas, Rakshasas, Yakshas, and Gandharvas. "Every year, when he sleeps covered with sand and begins to breathe, the earth trembles for seven days, and the sand raised by his breath shrouds the sun." He then told him the boon granted by Vishnu (see § 474) (III, 202). They agreed that Kuvalaçva should slay the Daitya, and Brhadaçva retired to the forest.—§ 477: Asked by Yudhishthira, Markandeya related: During the cataclysm, when Vishnu, wearing a crown and the Kaustubha, and dressed in yellow (pita) silk, stretched over many yojanas, lay sleeping on the hood of Cosha, who encircled the earth, and a lotus sprang from his navel, and from that lotus Brahman, who is the four Vedas with four faces, the Danavas Madhu and Kaitabha began to terrify Brahman. Vishnu awoke, and offered to grant them a boon, and as they wished to grant him a boon, he chose that they should be slain by him, and at their request he promised to slay them on a wholly uncovered spot, and that they should become his sons; as only his thighs were uncovered, he there cut off their heads with his discus (III, 203).- § 478: Their son was Dhundhu. Description of his penances, and the boon he obtained from Brahmán, etc. (see § 476). When Kuvaldeva, with his 21,000 sons and his troops, and Uttanka set out, an aërial voice was heard, the gods showered flowers, etc., and the gods, Gandharvas, and great rshis came to behold the encounter. At the request of Uttanka, Vishnu filled Kuvakaçva with his own energy. He let his sons excavate the sea of sands in seven days, and then they aroused the Danava, assailing him with arrows, etc. He swallowed the arrows and vomited flames, which consumed all the sons of Kuvalāçva, but were extinguished by a stream of water flowing from the body of Kuvalacva, who then burnt him with the Brahmastra, whence he was named Dhundhumara ("slayer of Dhundhu"). The gods and great rehis granted him the boon that he should always be able to give wealth to brahmans, etc. Then the gods and great rahis went away to their abodes. Kuralaços had three sons left - Drahaçva, Kapilaçva, and Candraçva, from whom sprang the Ikahvāku kings. Blessing upon the reader (III, 204).

Dirghatamas, a rehi. § 170 (cf. Bhīshma-Satyavatīsamvāda): Bhīshma continued: The rehi Utathya had a wife named Mamatā; his younger brother Brhaspati, the purchita of the gods, approached Mamatā, who by Utathya was pregnant with a child, who even while being in his mother's womb had studied the Vedas and the six Angas. The embryo kicked him out with his foot, and the semen fell upon the earth. Brhaspati cursed him; so he was born blind, and came to be called Dirghatamas ("tamo dirgham pracekshyasi"). The wife of Dirghatamas was a brāhmasī, Pradveshi by name. With her he begat Gautama and other sons; and he (Dirghalamas), who knew the Vedas and Angas, having learnt the Godharma (i.e. prakaçamaithuna, NII.) from Saurabheya (i.e. son of the Kamadhenu, Nil.) began to practise it. He therefore was excluded by the rehis from the asylum, and accosted in harsh words by his wife, who said that she would no more support him and his children. Dirghatamas then established the rule that from that day every woman should have to adhere to one husband for life, whether he were dead or alive, etc. She then caused her sons to tie him on a raft and throw him into the Ganga. Drifting along, he passed through the territories of many kings, until he was taken up by king Bali, who wanted him to raise up offspring. But Bali's queen Sudeshna, who saw that he was blind, sent a Cudra woman in her stead, who was her nurse, with whom the rshi begat eleven sons, Kakshivat, etc. As these sons were his own and not Bali's, Bali sent Sudeshna to him, and Dirghatamas, after merely touching her person, told her: "Thou shalt have five children named Anga, Vanga, Kalinga, Pundra, and Suhma." Their dominions have come to be called after their names: I, 104, 4192, 4198, (4202), 4218.—§ 266 (Çakrasabhāv.): II, 7, 293 (in the palace of Indra).—§ 717b (Nārāyaṇīya): XII, 342, 13182 (originally he, on account of his blindness, was called D., but when he had been cured by invoking Nārāyana as Keçava, he was called Gotama).—§ 775 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 166, 7668 (among the rshis of the west). Draupadīharaņa(m) parva. § 10 (Parvasangr.): I, 2, 325 (i.e. Draupadīharaņaparvan).

[Draupadiharanaparvan] ("the carrying away of Dranpadi," the 46th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Draupadiharana(m) parva.) § 521: While Duryodhana, Duḥçāsana, Karņa, and Çakuni were longing to harm the Pandaras, Durvasas arrived with 10,000 disciples, and harassed Duryodhana with his whimsical and insolent behaviour; but as Duryodhana was neither angered nor annoyed, he granted him a boon. According to what had been agreed upon between himself and Karna and Duhçasana, Duryodhana asked Durvasas to visit the Pandaras with his disciples, when Draupadi, after having reguled the brahmans, etc., with food, would have gone to rest. Durvasas promised to do so (III, 262). Then Durvasas one day came to the Pandavas with 10,000 disciples, when the meal was over and hrshna was reposing. Krshna then praised Krshna, who, leaving Rukmini, who was sleeping by his side, came to her and demanded something to cat. Draupudi became embarrassed, because the sun-given vessel only remained full till she had finished her meal, and therefore now was empty. At the request of Krshna she, however, fetched the vessel, and Krshna found a particle of rice and vegetable sticking at its rim, and swallowing it he said to her: "May it please the god who is the soul of the universe (viçvātmā), and may the partaker of sacrifices (yajñabhuk) be satisfied." ordered Bhima (B. Sahadeva) to invite the munis to dinner. Meanwhile those ascetics, having bathed in the river. observed that their stomachs were full, and us Durvasas feared that the Pandavas would destroy them, looking down upon them with angry eyes, because the repast had been uselessly prepared for them ("I am afraid," said Durvasas, "of men that are devoted to Hari"), they all ran away, so that Bhima (B. Sahadeva) sought for them in vain. As the Pandavas were afraid that the munis might return at night and curse them, Krshna suddenly appeared and consoled them. Then he repaired to his capital (III, 263).- § 522: One day when the Pandavas had gone a-hunting, leaving Draupadi in the hermitage with the permission of the great rshi Irnabindu and of Dhaumya, the king of Sindhu (of Sauvira, v. 15599; of the Cibis, Sauviras, Sindhus, etc., 15621). Jayadratha Varddhakshattri, who, with a view of matrimony, was on his way to the king of the Calreyas, halted in the wood of Kamyaka, and seeing Draupadi standing at the threshold of the hermitage, he fell in love with her, and sent king Kotikasya (king Suratha's son, v. 15593; the foremost of the Cibis, v. 15602) to inquire who she was (III, 264). Kotikāsya introduced himself to Draupadī and showed her the Trigarta king Kshemankara, and the son of the king of the Kulindas ("who always lives in the mountains"), and the son of Subala (B. Subhava) of the race of Ikshvāku; he said that Jayaaratha was there at the head of 6,000 chariots. etc., followed by twelve Sauvira princes as his standard-bearers (Angāraka, etc., enumerated) (a), and his brothers (Balāhaka, Anika, Viduraņa, etc.) (III, 265). Draupadī told Koţikūsya who she was, and that her husbands were out a-hunting (Yudhishthira to the east, Bhima towards the south, Arjuna to the west, and the Acrins towards the north), and invited them to alight and await the return of the Pandavas (III. 268). Kotikasya told Jayadratha the words of Draupadi, and exhorted him to take her with him to the Sauviras. Jayadratha introduced himself to Draupadi, who offered him water for washing his feet, and promised him fifty animals for breakfast and various kinds of deer, etc., etc. (cnumerated), when Yudhishthira returned. Jayadratha asked her to leave the miserable Pandavas and become his wife (III, 267), but was severely rebuked by Draupadi, who threatened him with the Pāṇḍavas. As Jayadratha said, "We too belong by birth to the seventeen high clans, and look down upon the Pandaras," she threatened him with Krshna and Arjuna, and the Andhakas, Vrshnis, and Kaikeyas, and called upon Dhaumya. Jayadratha seized her by her upper garment; Draupadi pushed him so that he fell upon the ground; but at last she was obliged to ascend his chariot, while Dhaumya followed amidst Jayadratha's infantry (III, 268). When the Pandavas again met, Yudhishthira knew from the shrill cries of the birds that the forest had been inveded by hostile intruders, and he caused them to give up the chase and drive home on their great chariots drawn by Saindhava horses. A yellow jackal on their left indicated the violence done. Indrasena learned what had happened from the weeping foster-sister of Draupadi, and then they pursued and overtook Jayadratha, who was greatly alarmed (III, 269). Draupadī, asked by Jayadratha, pointed out to him each of the five Pandavas, and advised him to throw down his arms and seek the protection of Yudhishthira, at the top of whose flagstaff two tabours called Nanda and Upananda are constantly played. The Pandavas, leaving the panic-stricken infantry alone, rushed upon the charioteers [so PCR., who seems to have read rathanikam, which is, to be sure, the right reading, instead of yathanikam, which occurs both in C. and B. (III, 270). Bhīma with his iron mace (sarvaçaikyāyasim gadām), embossed with gold, rushed towards Jayadratha, who was defended by Kotikasya. The Trigarta king, who had killed the four steeds of Yudhishthira with his mace, was himself killed by Yudhishthira, who then, together with Indrasena, mounted the chariot of Sahadeva. Nakula killed Kehemankara and Mahamukha, and was compelled by the Trigarta king Suratha (whom he killed?) to mount Bhima's chariot. Bhima put Kotikāsya to flight and slew him. Arjuna killed the twelve Sauvira heroes, etc.; Jayadratha put Draupadi down and fled. Yudhishthira, seeing Draupadi and Dhaumya walking in front. caused her to be taken up on the chariot of Sahadeva. Arjuna advised Bhima to refrain from slaying the remuant of the Saindhava host. Bhima prevailed upon Yudhishthira to return to the hermitage with the twins and Draupadi and Dhaumya, while he himself would find out and slay Jayadratha. Yudhishthira entreated him not to slay him, remembering Duhçalā and Gāndhārī; but Draupadi indignantly required that he should be slain, and Bhima and Arjuna went in search of him. In the hermitage Yudhishthira found Mürkandeya and many other brahmans and ascetics, who were greatly bewailing the lot of Draupadi. Meanwhile Arjuna killed the horses of Jayadratha, though they were a full krocs shead of him. Jayadratha was then overtaken by Bhims, but Arjuns entreated Bhims not to kill him (III, 271).

[Draupadīparitāpavākya(m)] ("the complaints of Draupadi"; cf. Arjunabhigamanaparvan). § 325: While they were conversing in the evening, filled with sorrow, Krshna, who wondered at the hardheartedness of Duryodhana, Karna, Cakuni, and Duhçasana, who were the only four that did not shed tears at their being exiled, and who lamented their present state so different from their former happiness, tried to excite Yudhishthira to revenge himself (III, 27) .- § 326: Draupadi related the old story of the conversation between Prahlada (the chief of the Asuras and the Danavas, well versed in the mysteries of the science of duty) and his grandson Bali Vairocana, in which Prahlada told Bali that neither might nor forgiveness is invariably meritorious, and then she said: "I therefore consider, O king! that time has come for thee to put forth thy might" (III; 28) .- § 327: Yudhishihira maintained that a wise man should ever forgive his persecutor; that wrath has been given to man for the destruction of the world; and cited gathas of the forgiving Kacyana: "Forgiveness is virtue, sacrifice, the Vedas, etc.; men of forgiveness obtain regions in the Brahmaloka; when one forgives everything, then he becomes bráhman (brahma sampadyate); this and the other world belongs to him who forgives; etc." (III, 29). From the fact that pious persons are often unhappy (v. 1133, Yudhishthira is said to have performed the acramedha (!), rajasuya, pundarika, and gosava sacrifices) and vicious persons happy, Draupadi concludes that Dhatr and Vidhatr have clouded Yudhishthira's senses, that it is folly to aspire to final emancipation (moksha), that the consequences of acts are inevitable, that God (Içvara, Dhātr, Svayambhū Prapitāmaha) makes creatures to work as a wooden doll is made to move its limbs by a wire-puller, etc., and causes them to destroy each other, that God does not behave towards his creatures like a father or mother, but like a vicious person; either God is sinful, or Might (and not God) is the true cause of acts, and then those are to be pitied that have no might (III, 30). Yudhishthira consured Krehna for her atheism (nastikya), saying that one should not act virtuously from the desire of reaping fruits, but because it is ordained so by the Veda, the ancient religion revealed by the rshis, and because it is the conduct of the good and wise; neither should one doubt virtue or religion nor censure God, by whose grace mortal man, by piety, acquires immortality. For though we may not see the results, being mysterious even to the gods, and the illusion (māyā) of the gods is mysterious to us, yet virtue and vice are not fruitless, as may be seen from the examples of Vyāsa, Vasishtha, Maitreya, Nārada, Lomaça, Çuka, and other rshis, who by virtue have become superior even to the gods; as also from her own and Dhrshtadyumna's birth; nor would men have practised virtue, generation after generation, if asceticism, etc., were useless, and no one would pursue salvation (nirvana), but they would live like beasts, and why should rshis, gods, Gandharvas, Rakshasas, and Asuras, who are above human conditions (Icvarah), cherish virtue? He who, trusting the proofs of his own reasoning, rejects other authority or doubts religion and virtue, loses this and yonder world, and is lower than even cudras and robbers (III, 31). Krshnā said that she did not slander religion nor disregard God (Içrara, Prajāpati, Maheçvara); it was affliction that had extorted these words from her. She maintained that besides what a man obtains from Necessity (hatha), Fate (daira), Accident (srabhāra), and deeds in a former life (karman) (all of which might be reduced to the last item, also called adreya), which God distributes, there are also things of which man himself is the cause, working through his own intelligence and exertion. It is by exertion (utthana; the explanation of Nil. here seems to be inadmissible) that all creatures live, even Dhatr and Vidhatr, as well as the crane on the water. Those who believe only in Destiny (dishta) or Necessity are both the meanest among men. On the other hand, if God were not the giver of good and bad fruits, there would not be any creature that was miserable, and all exertions would be successful. Manu himself declares that a man should act; and if he works, even if he be not successful, his debt is cancelled. "Having exerted thyself, thou wilt know what the fruit of thy exertions will be. The tiller tills the soil with the plough, and sows the seed thereon; he then sits silent, for the clouds are now the cause; and if no rain favours him, the tiller is without blame . . . If, however, no exertion is made, there can be no success . . . All this, uttered by Brhaspati himself. a learned brahman said to my father and my brothers; from them I heard it" (III, 32). Bhima tried to prevail upon Yudhishthira that (especially as they had lost the sovereignty by his carelessness) he should make war with the Dhartsrushtras, aided by the Srajayas and Kaikeyas and Krshna. maintaining that a man should practise virtue (dharma) for the sake of gaining wealth (artha), and acquire wealth for the sake of pleasure (kāma), but neither for its own sake; that might and energy (and the protecting of the subjects) constitute the virtue of the Kshatriya, and that deviation from the virtues of one's own order is never laudable; that the Asuras, though older brothers in possession of power and abundance, were all vanquished by the gods through stratagem; that as wealth should be spent by one who wishes to increase his wealth, just as seeds are scattered on the ground, thus a person who throws away a little of his virtue like seeds (dharma) in order to gain a larger measure of virtue is regarded as wise, and that whatever sin a monarch commits in acquiring dominion, he cancels it all afterwards by sacrifices and by bestowing villages, etc., on brahmans (III, 33). Yudhishthira declared that he was unable to violate the pledge, and that it was now too late for Bhima to use harsh words (III, 34). Bhina said that only he whose life is unlimited, or who krows what the period of his life is, has time to wait; they ought to strive for the possession of the kingdom before they died; "if a man, slaying his injurer, goes the very day into hell, that hell becomes heaven to him; the pain one feels in having to suppress his wrath is more burning than fire itself; . . . thou art kind like a brahman, how hast thou been born in the Kshatriya order? those who are born in this order are generally of cruel hearts; thou hast heard the duties of kings, as promulgated by Manu, cruel and fraught with crookedness and opposed to tranquillity (cama); moreover, we will not be able to live unknown, as we are known all over the world, and many kings, who have been expelled by us from their kingdoms, and robbed and exiled by us, will assist Duryodhana and set against us numerous spies in disguise; we have now lived in the woods for thirteen months, which may be regarded as so many years, as pūtikas (see BR. and Nil.) are a substitute for the soma; or one may free himself from this sin by offering food to a bull" (see Nil.) (III, 35).

Draupadiputra, pl. ("the sons of Draupadi") = Draupadeya, pl.: VI, 1655, 2755; X, 365.

[Draupadī - sambhava(h)] ("origin of Draupadī"). § 218 (Caitrarathap.): Distressed and thinking of revenging himself on Drona, not contented with his children and relatives, king Drupada wandered along the Yamuna and the Ganga and came to a hermitage of brahmans, and prevailed upon Yāja (b) to perform a sacrifice for him, assisted by his brother Upayaja, in order to obtain a son who might slay Drona. Then Yaja summoned the queen (Prehatī, v. 6390; Pārehatī, v. 6405; "daughter-in-law of Prshata," PCR.), but she said that she was not fit for accepting the offspring (?), her mouth being unclean (avalipta) and her person perfumed. Yaja replied: "Since the sacrifice has been prepared (grapitam) by Yaja and sanctified by Upayaja's invocations (abhimantritam), it shall produce its effect whether thou comest or waitest." Then arose from the flames a boy with a crown on his head, his body being arrayed in excellent armour, sword in hand and carrying a bow and arrows, sending forth loud roars, and immediately ascending a chariot. A great invisible being in the skies said that he would destroy Drona, etc. After this Pañcali arose from the centre of the vedi, and a voice, not coming from a visible body, said that she would be the cause of the destruction of many kshatriyas. At the birth of both children the Pañcalas shouted with joy. The queen was regarded as their mother. Then the brahmans gave to the boy the name of Dhrshtadyumna, on account of his audacity, etc. (dhrshfalvad atidhrshnutvad dyumnadyulsambhavad api, v. 6406), and to the girl that of Krehna, on account of her dark complexion (v. 6407). Drong brought Dhrshtadyumna to his own abode, and taught him the use of all weapons, considering that destiny is inevitable (I, 167).

[Draupadī-Satyabhāmā-samvādaparvan] ("conversation between Draupadī and Satyabhāmā," the 42nd of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). § 510: After the brahmans and Pāndavas had taken their seats, Draupadī and Satyabhāmā Sātrājītī, the favourite wife of Krshna, entered the hermitage. Satyabhāmā asked Draupadī how she made the Pāndavas obedient to her, in order that she herself might by the same means secure the affection of Krshna.

Drawpadi warned her against using drugs, incantations, etc., which were used by wicked women, and said that she kept aloof from vanity and served the Pandayas with devotion, etc. Formerly, in the palace of Yudhishthira at Indraprastha, food was daily given to 8,000 brahmans. 80,000 snātakas with thirty serving-maids assigned to each, 10,000 yatis; he had 100,000 well-dressed serving-maids with bracelets, etc., all skilled in singing and dancing; 100,000 maidservants who day and night used to feed guests; 100,000 horses, and 100,000 elephants. And it was Draupadi who had the supervision of all this; she knew the names and features of all the girls, and knew everything about them, and even about the cowherds and shepherds. She alone knew the income and expenditure of the king and what their whole wealth was, bearing hunger and thirst, and being the first to wake up and the last to go to bed (III, 233). Draupadi said that for women there is no god equal to the husband, as it is from him the wife obtains offspring. articles of enjoyment, fame, and heaven itself hereafter. In order to attract the heart of Krshna, Salyabhāmā ought to let him understand that she adored him with all her heart by promptly, when she saw him enter her chamber, offering him a seat and water to wash his feet; and even if he ordered a maidservant to do anything, she ought to got up and do it herself; not to blab of whatever he should speak before her; feed those that were dear to him, and keep herself aloof from those that were hostile to him; not to stay or converse in private even with her sons Pradyumna and Camba; and shun wicked women (III, 234).—§ 511: Then Krehna bade farewell to the Pandavas and to Markandeya, etc., and called for Satyabhāmā. Satyabhāmā comforted Draupadī, saying that she would soon recover her ancient happiness. and relating of Prativindhya, Crutasoma, and Crutakarman (her son by Arjuna), and Catanika (her son by Nakula), and Crutasena (her son by Sahadeva), that they were well and skilled in weapons and, like Abhimanyu, delighted with staying at Dvāravatī, and were loved by Subhadrā, Pradyumna, Krehna, with his son Bhanu, etc., and her mother-in-law, and all the Andhakas and Vrshnis, with Rama, etc. Then Satyabhāmā mounted the chariot of Krshna and they set out for his city (III, 235).

Drona, the preceptor of the Dhartarashtras and the Pandavas, Dhrshtadyumna, etc., son of Bharadvaja, husband of Krpi, and father of Acvatthaman. § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 138, †186, †194, †196, †199 (Aoaryam), †201.-- 9 (Parvasangr.): I, 2, 300.—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 537.—§ 83 (Adivamçavatarana): I, 63, 2436 (father of Açvatthaman), 2438 (Dhrshtadyumna was born for the destruction of D.).—§ 130 (Amçavat.): I, 67. 2705 (Bhāradvājam, born from a portion of Brhaspati), 2707 (Dhanurvede Vede ca yam tam Vedavido viduh varishtham). - § 199 (Sambhavap.): Bhishma prevailed upon D. to accept the Pandavas and the Kauravas as his pupils in the Dhanurveda: I, 130, 5096 (Bhāradvājāya).—§ 200 (do.): Janamejaya said: "Tell me about the birth of Drong and of his son Acvatthaman." Vaiçampāyana said: The rshi Bharadvaja who dwelt at Gangadvara one day saw the Apsaras Ghytaoi coming from her bath; then his seed came out, but was preserved by him in a vessel (drona); from that seed sprang D., who studied the Vedas and the Vedangas. Bharadvaja had taught Agniveça the use of the Agneya weapon, and the muni who had sprung from Fire (i.e. Agniveca) now taught it to D.: I. 130, 5100. 5106.- § 201 (do.): D. was a friend of Drupada (q.v.). Drona remained in the hermitage of his father and practised austerities. With Krpi Caradvati he had the son Acvatthaman (b). D. studied the Dhanurveda. About this time Rama Jamadagnya desired to distribute his wealth among the brahmans, and Drona (of the race of Angiras, v. 5122) with his disciples set out for the mountain Mahendra to have his share in the wealth and learn from Rama the Dhanurveda, the use of celestial weapons, and the niticastra. When he arrived, Rama had already given his wealth to the brahmans and the earth to Kacyapa; he then asked D. to choose either his body or his weapons. Drong accepted the weapons and the Dhanurveda, and then repaired to Drupada: I, 130. 5110, 5114, 5122, 5124, 5130, (5131).- § 202 (do.): As Drupada rebuked him for calling him his friend, D., filled with wrath, went to Hastinapura, where he for some time lived privately in the house of Krpa (his brother-in-law), while Açvatthaman, being unknown, taught the Parthas (i.e. the Pandavas) the use of arms. One day, when D. Had by means of blades of grass, which were consecrated by mantras, recovered a ball which the princes had lost in a well, and, by means of an arrow, his ring which he had thrown into the well, he was called to Bhishma, whom he told that he had applied to Drupada in order to obtain milk for Accatthaman (b), but had been robuked by him. Bhishma asked D. to make the princes accomplished in arms: I, 131, 5136, 5155, 5158, (5160), 5162, 5164, 5167, (5168), 5170, 5171, (5172), 5177, 5188.- § 203 (do.): Bhishma presented D. with a pretty house, etc., and gave the Dhartarashtras and the Pandavas to him as his pupils. Arjuna (b) became the foremost of D.'s pupils, even superior to Aquatthaman (c). Also the Vyshnis and the Andhakas and princes from various countries became his pupils. Even Karns came to learn the Dhanurveds; he. supported by Duryodhana, frequently defied Arjuna: I, 132, 5211, 5214, (5216), 5219, 5220, 5223, 5225, 5228, 5230, 5231, 5236, (5237), 5238, 5239.-\$ 204 (Ekalavya): I, 132, 5241, 5243, 5246, 5255 (°cishyam, i.e. Ekalavya), 5256, 5260, 5262, 5263, 5264, 5266, 5269 (D. asked the thumb of the right hand of Ekalavya as his tutorial fee, in order that Ekalarya might not surpass the Pandavas). - § 205 (Sambhavap.): The foremost pupils of Drona were Duryodhana, Bhimasena, Açvatthaman (b), Nakula (c) and Sahadeva (c), Yudhishthira (d), and Arjuna (s). The Dhartarashtras became very jealous of Bhima and Arjuna: I, 132, 5270 .- § 206 (do.): One day D. caused an artificial bird to be placed on the top of a tree, and first repeatedly asked Yudhishthira, when he stood aiming at the bird, what he did see. He answered that he saw the tree, D., his brothers, and the bird. D. reproachingly told him to stand apart. Then D. repeated the experiment with his other pupils with the same result (I, 132). At last Arjuna's turn came; he said first that he saw only the vulture, and then that he saw only its head, and when D. gave the order he struck off the head of the bird with his shaft: I, 132, 5276, (5278), 5282, (5284), 5286; 133, 5289, 5292, 5293, 5294, 5296.—§ 207 (do.): Arjuna rescued the life of D. by shooting with five arrows an alligator in the Ganga, which had seized the thigh of D. D. gave Ariuna the weapon Brahmaciras on condition that he should not use it against a human foe, as it might consume the whole universe (I, 133): I, 133, 5300, 5303.—§ 208 (Astradarçana): I, 134, 5312; 135, (5350), 5352, 5376; 136, 5384, 5390, 5399; 137, 5433, 5439 (the disciples of D. displayed their prowess in the use of arms).—§ 209 (Drupadaçāsana): I, 138, 5445, 5447, 5454, 5466, 5502, 5503, 5511, 5513, 5515, 5516 (assisted by his pupils. D. vanquished Drupada, but restored the half of his kingdom to him, and thenceforth he himself ruled the other half, residing in Ahicchatra).- § 2100 (Arjuna): I, 139, 5523, 5524, 5529, 5533 (D. had obtained the Brahmaçiras from Agniveça and given it to Arjuna (cf. § 207); Arjuna promised to fight with D. [Dronābhishekaparvan] ("the section relating to the inauguration of Drona," the 71st of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Dronābhishecana). § 589: Janamejaya enquired of the state of Dhṛtarāshṭra on the receipt of intelligence of Bhīshma's death. Vaiçampāyana's answer: Dhṛtarāshṭra asked Sañjaya about what the Kauravas did after the fall of Bhīshma. Sañjaya mentioned the arrow-pillow, etc. (cf. § 587 foll.), and that the warriors once more went to battle. The Kurus desired to make Karna their generalissimo (mentioning his enmity with Bhīshma) (VII, 1). Karna eulogised Bhīshma, and promised to be their leader, mentioning the prowess of Yudhishṭhira, etc. (a); he commanded his charioteer to make his chariot ready (VII, 2). Karna waited upon Bhīshma (mentioning the danger to the Kurus from Arjuna with the Gandiva, etc.; Arjuna's battle with Civa; Krehna; Bhishma's battle with Rama) (VII, 3). Bhishma, mentioning Karna's prowess against the Kambojas, etc. (3), urged him to fight for the victory of Duryodhana. Then Karna saluted Bhishma, and, at his return, was worshipped by Duryodhana and the Kauravas (VII, 4). Duryodhana asked Karna's advice as to who should become the generalissimo of the Kuru army. Karna proposed Drona (VII, 5). Duryodhana requested Drona to take the command (VII, 6). Drona, mentioning his knowledge of the Veda and the Caiva weapon, etc., and his inability to slay Dhrshtadyumne. accepted the request. . Duryodhana and the kings performed the inauguration of Drona, at which the army rejoiced. Drona arrayed the troops: the Sindhu king, etc. ( $\gamma$ ), in the right wing, supported by Çukuni, etc.; Kṛpa, etc. ( $\delta$ ), in the left wing, supported by the Kāmbojas, etc. (1); the Madras, etc. (5), in the rear; Karna at the head of all the bowmen. The array was in the form of a cakata (cart). Yudhishthira disposed his troops in the form of a krauñca (crane), with Krshna and Arjuna at the head. Omens appeared when Drona proceeded to battle. The Pandaras and Srnjayas were broken by Drona. Dhrshtadyumna & Drona (VII, 7). Yudhishthira urged Dhrahtadyumna and Arjuna to check Drona. The Kokaya princes, etc.  $(\eta)$ , "achieved diverse feats." Drona put the Pandava troops to rout. Drona & the Kekaya princes, At last Drong, having slain more than two akshauhinis, "proceeded hence to heaven" ("attained to the highest state") slain by Dhrshfadyumna. D., P., etc., beheld him (VII, 8). Dhṛtarūshṭra asked Sañjaya the particulars of Drona's heroism and slaughter (mentioning his knowledge of the Vedas; his ability to remove Meru; his equality to Brhaspati or Uçanas; his horses of the Sindhu breed, etc. (1)) (VII, 9). Dhṛtarāshṭra swooned away, and was restored to consciousness by the Bharata ladies. Then he enquired of Sanjaya about Yudhishthira, etc. (x), especially Yuyudhana Sātyaki (b), and Dhrehtaketu (c), and Ketumat (d); and the children of Dhrshtadyumna, Kshatrañjaya, etc. (λ), who. giving up all sports for twelve years, and observing excellent vows, waited upon Bhishma for the sake of weapons; and the five Kaikeya brothers (e); and Yuyutsu (f), and Dhrehtadyumna (g) (VII, 10). Dhrtarashtra recited the feats of Krshna: the killing of Hayarāja, etc. ( $\mu$ ), that he had vanquished in battle the Angas, etc. (v), and that if Krehna would summon them, Gada, etc. (£), would take up their position in the Pandava host; and regretted that Duryodhana did not know Krshna and Arjuna; the destruction of the Kurus he attributed to himself or to Destiny (VII, 11). - § 590: Sanjaya begins his narrative in detail. THE ELEVENTH DAY'S BATCLE: Duryodhana, having consulted with Karna and Duhçasana, etc., asked Drona to seize Yudhishthira ulive. Drona became very glad because Duryodhana had not asked him to slay Yudhishthira. Duryodhana explained that if Yudhishthira were slain, the other Pandavas, who were invincible, would avenge him; but taken alive, he might be once more vanquished at dice, and so all the Pandavas be obliged once more to go to the woods. Drona said that he would seize Yudhishthira if not protected by Arjuna (with his weapons from Indra and Rudra, etc.); Arjuna, therefore, must be withdrawn from Yudhishthira. Duryodhana proclaimed the promise of Drong to all his troops, in order to make him stick to his promise (VII, 12). Yudhishthira learned through his spies that Drops had promised to seize him, and addressed his brothers and allies; Arjuna consoled him. A fierce battle commenced. Protected by Drona and Arjuna, both hosts seemed to stand inactive. The Pandavas could not withstand Drona, who began to consume the division of Dhrehtadyumna (VII, 13). Drona caused a river of blood to flow there. Yudhishthira & Drona; Cakuni & Sahadeva; Drona & Dhrshtadyumna; Bhīmasena & Vivimçati; Çalya & Nakula; Dhṛshṭaketu & Krpa; Satyaki & Krtavarman; Senapati & Suçarman; Virata (with the Matsyas) & Karna; Drupada & Bhagadatta; Bhūricravas & Cikhandin; Ghatotkaca & Alambusha; Cekitāna & Anuvinda; Lakshmana & Kshatradeva; Paurava & Abhimanyu; Paurdia was rescued by Krtavarman, and then by Jayadratha; Abhimanyu (letting Paurava alone) & Jayadiatha, who was vanquished; Calya & Abhimanyu; Virața, etc. (a), praised Auhimanyu; Dhrtarashtra's sons + Calya & Abhimanyu (VII, 14); Bhimasona + Abhimanyu & Calya; Bhimasena (causing Abhimanyu to stand aside) & Calva; both fell down; Krtavarman took Calya away on his chariot; the Pundavas vanquished the Dhurtarushtras (VII, 15). Karna's son Frshasena attacked the Pandava urmy; Nakula's son Catanika & Vrshasena; the Draupadeyah + the Pandavas & Vrshasena + Açvatthaman, etc.; especially Bhima, etc. (B). The Kuru army was broken. Drona & Yudhishthira; the Pañcala prince Kumara (the protector of Yudhishthira's car-wheels) & Drona; Drona & Çikhandin, etc. (7); Drona caused Yugandhara to fall down from the seat of his chariot; Virata, etc. (δ), & Drona; Vyaghradatta (the Pañcala prince) & Drona; Simhasena & Drona, who slew both Simhasena and Vyūghradatta; Arjuna, in order to rescue Yudhishthira, attacked Drona's division. Just then the sun set. Drona and Durvodhana, etc., withdrew their troops, and so did Arjuna. The Pāndavas, etc. (e), praised Arjuna (VII, 16).

Dronavadha ("the slaughter of Drona"). § 10 (Parvasangr.): I, 2, 345 ("ah parra, i.e. Dronavadhaparvan).

[Dronavadhaparvan] ("the section including the slaughter of Drona," the 77th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.; cf. Dronavadha). § 601: Continuation of the night after THE FOURTEENTH DAY: According to the words of Vudsa. Yudhishthia refrained from himself seeking to slav Karna. but was filled with grief and anger because Karna had slain Ghatotkaca. Beholding the Kurus held in check by Bhīma, he told Dhrshtadyumna, etc. (a), to attack Drona, who received them; Duryodhana, etc., came to Drona's rescue; a fierce battle ensued between the two hosts; both armies became sorely afflicted with fatigue and blind with sleep. Arjuna granted permission to the warriors to sleep. D., R., and the soldiers applauded Arjuna; the Kurus asked Karna and Duryodhana to abstain from the fight; all the combatants laid themselves down on the field to sleep (description); the Kaurava troops blessed Arjuna for his act of kindness. When the moon rose, both hosts, rising from sleep, again prepared for battle (VII, 184). Duryodhana taxed Drona wruthfully for his kindness to the Pandavas (B); Drona in wrath promised to slay all the Pañcalas, and described the measure of Arjuna's might and prowess ( $\gamma$ ). Duryodhana vowed that he, etc. ( $\delta$ ), that very day would slay Arjuna, dividing the Bharata host into two divisions. Drona ridiculed Duryodhana ( $\epsilon$ ), saving that it was only right that Duryodhana or Çakuni, who were the root of the hostility, should proceed against Arjuna, instead of causing all the unoffending Kshatriyas to be slain, and that he should accomplish his boasting vow before Dhrtarūshira, and that he and Karna and Duhçāsana would slay the Pāndavas; moreover, he had done all in life that one should do. The army then was divided into two bodies, and the battle commenced (VII, 185). - § 602: THE FIFTEENTH DAY: When three-quarters of that night had worn away, the battle once more commenced. At sunrise both hosts, alighting from their chariots, etc., uttered the prayers of the twilight. After the Kuru army had been divided into two bodies, Drona, with Duryodhana before him, proceeded against the Somakas, the Pandaras, and the Pancalas. Urged by Krshna, Arjuna moved to the left of Drona and Karna. Bhima urged Arjuna to put forth all his vigour. Arjuna & Drona & Karna, etc. (ζ) (description). Drona moved away towards the north; the Pandava troops began to tremble; the Pañcalas & Drona; Drupada and Virala + the three grandsons of Drupada + the Cedis & Drona, who slew the three grandsons of Drupada, vanquished the Cedis, etc. (7), and slew Drupada and Virata. Dhrshtadyumna swore to slav Drong that very day; Drupada with his division (from one side) + Arjuna (from another side) & Drong + Duryodhana, etc. (0); Bhima urged Dhrshtadyumna, and they both attacked Drona's division (description); soon the morning sun arosé (VII, 186). The warriors adored the Sun, as he rose, and the battle once more commenced (description); neither Karna, etc. (1), could be seen for dust. Duryodhana, etc. (k), engaged in battle with four of the Pandava warriors: Duryodhana + his brothers & Nakula and Sahadeva; Karna & Bhima; Drona & Arjuna; Nakula was worsted by Duryodhana (VII, 187); Sahadeva slew Duhçusana's driver; Duhçasana was worsted by Sahadeva; Bhima jumped into the chariot of Nakula; Drona invoked the Aindra, etc.  $(\lambda)$ , weapons; D., G., R., Si., Aps., Y., and Ra. applauded Drong and Arjuna, saying that "this is no human, etc. (µ), but a high Brahma encounter"; both employed the Brahma weapon; the engagement became general (VII, 188). Duhçusana & Dhrehtadyumna, who vanquished him and proceeded against Krtavarman + three of his brothers & Dhrahtadyumna + Nakula and Sahadeva. who checked them (enumeration of unfair weapons that were not used): Dhrshtadyumna proceeded towards Drona. Dhrshtadyumna + Satyaki & Drona + Duryodhana (who grieved on account of his former friendship with Sātyaki); Duryodhana was worsted by Satyaki; Karna rushed to the rescue of Duryodhana; Bhīma rushed towards Karna. Yudhishthira urged his warriors to rush to the rescue of Satyaki, Bhima, and the twins: Ariuna attacked the Kurus, and Drona attacked the Pañoulas (VII. 189). Drona caused a great carnage among the Pañcalas; the Pañcalas and Srnjuyas & Drona; the Pandavas feared, thinking that Arjuna would not fight with Drona. Krshna told Arjuna to abandon virtue and let some man tell Drona that Açralthaman had been slain in battle. Arjuna did not approve of it; others approved of it, but Yudhishthira with great difficulty. Bhima slew with a mace an elephant named Ayratthaman belonging to the Malava chief Indravarman, and exclaimed before Drona: "Acvatthaman has been slain." Drona did not believe Bhima, but attacked Dhrshladyumna and slew the Pañcalas (and Somakas) with the Brahma weapon, and cut off the head of Vasudana, and slew 500 Matsyas, etc. The R. Viccamitra, etc., etc. (v), appeared in the welkin and reproved Drona for using the Brahma weapon against persons not acquainted with it, and called upon Drona to lay aside his weapons and leave the earth soon. Drona asked Yudhishthira whether the report about Accatthaman's death was true; Krshna urged Yudhishthira to save his army by an untruth; Bhima urged him to do the same; Yudhishthira distinctly said that Acvatthaman was dead, adding indistinctly the word "elephant"; before this Yudhishthira's chariot had stayed at a height of four fingers' breadth from the surface of the earth; after this untruth his animals touched the earth. Drona became quite dejected, also after the words of the R., and beholding Dhrehtadyumna before him, could not fight as before (VII, 190). Dhrshtadyumna & Drona; the celestial weapons no longer appeared at Drona's bidding; his weapons, that had not been exhausted for four days and one night, now became exhausted on the third part of the fifth day. Drong took up another celestial bow which Angiras had given him; a fierce encounter took place between Drona and Dhrshtadyumna; none else had arrows of that kind that Irona used in close fight except Krpa, etc. (5); Sātyaki rescued Dhrshtadyumna and was applauded by Krohna and Arjuna, and the Si., . . (VII, 191). Duryodhana, Karna, und Krpa + Dhrtaras tra's sons & Sūtyaki + Yudhishthira, etc. (o); Yudhishthira vged his troops against Drona (in order to aid Dhrshtadyum 1.1), who again used the Brahma weapon; Bhima took up Dhrsh{adyumna on his own chariot, and urged him to slay Drona quickly; both Dhrshfadyumna and Drona invoked the Brahma weapon, etc.; Dhrahfadyumna began to slay the Vaçutis, etc.  $(\pi)$ ; Bhima again reminded Drons of Accatthaman's death, calling upon Karna, Krps, and Duryodhana to exert carefully in battle. Drons laid his weapons saide, devoted himself to yoga, and proceeded to heaven (Brahmaloka) in the company of the foremost of R., in a blaze of light, that only Sañjaya, etc. (ρ), saw; Dhrshtadyumna cut off Drona's head—though forbidden by Arjuna and blamed by everybody—and threw it down amongst the Kurus, who ran away in all directions, except Accatthāman. Sañjaya, through the grace of Vyāsa, beheld Drona's proceeding after he had ascended the sky. The Kurus, the Pāṇāavas, and the Srñjayas all became dejected and ran away; Bhimasena and Dhrshtadyumna embraced each other, Bhīmasena expecting the slaughter of Karna and Duryodhana (VII, 192).

[Drupadacāsana(m)] ("the chastising of Drupada"). § 209 (Sambhavap.): Drong now one day asked the Dhartarashtras and Pandavas for his fee as their instructor, saving: "Seize ye the Pañcala king Drupada in battle and bring him to me." Duryodhana, Karna, Yuyutsu, Duhçasana, Vikarna, Jalazandha, Sulocana, Subahu, Dirghalocana, etc., smote the Pañcalas and conquered the capital of Drupada, while Arjana, etc., waited outside the town at a distance of half a kroça, thinking that the others were not able to seize Drupada. Defeated by Drupada, they fell back upon the Pandavas. Arjuna, bidding Yudhishthira not to engage in the fight, appointed the sons of Madri his cakrarakshas, while Bhimasena, mace in hand, ran ahead to slay the elephants, while Arjuna attacked the Pañodlas and Syñjayas and felled Drupada from his elephant. Drupada and Satyajit rushed at Arjuna. Satyajit had his bows repeatedly cut in twain and his horses, etc., slain, and desisted from the fight.

Drupada also had his bow cut in twain, etc., by Arjuna, who then took a scimitar and, leaping from his own chariot upon that of his foe, seized Drupada, while the Pāñoālas ran away. Bhīma, etc., began to lay waste his capital, but were prevented by Arjuna. Drona prevailed upon Drupada to accept his friendship, and restored half his kingdom to him, vis., that part of it that lay on the southern side of the Bhāgīrathī, with the southern Pāñoālas, up to the banks of the Carmanvatī river, where Drupada thenceforth resided sorrowfully in Kāmpilya in Mākandī, on the banks of Gangā, while Drona (because Drupada had said that only a king could be the friend of a king) retained that half that lay to the north of the Bhāgīrathī, and thenceforth continued to reside in Ahiechatra (I, 138).
